Records: He Breaks Them.
Borah Speaks to France.
A Voice From Louisiana.
A Hideous Crime.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

IF CAPT. HAWKS fails to break a record, that is news. His latest achievement, after being adopted by the Sioux Indians who named him "Flying Hawk," is a hop from Chicago to New York in 3 hours and 46 minutes.

Much of the way he flew in clouds, unable to see the ground. The regular schedule for that trip by rail was once 18 hours. Railroads wisely increased it to 20 hours, for safety.

AIR TRAVEL has only begun. Within a few years, long-distance travel by rail will be unknown.

Stagecoach owners thought locomotives could never take the place of horses. The old English kings said powder and shot could never replace the reliable English bow and arrow. Both were mistaken.

FRANCE AND ALL Europe will read with concentrated attention statements by Senator Borah, head of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, concerning French demands for "safety" against Germany. He says:

"Germany is disarmed and dismembered. Austria disarmed, and sheared down to pitiable impotence. Hungary is disarmed and divided into five parts.

"France has an army of 560,000. Germany about 95,000. France economically is powerful. Germany, Austria, Hungary are prostrate. France has a military alliance with Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia, Poland, Rumania and Belgium.

"The Locarno pact compels England to support France, if Germany should attack France."

He adds that the French are planning "the destruction of Germany, Austria and Hungary, but the world will not consent."

WONDROUSLY DETERMINED and efficient are the French. They have piled up more gold than they ever had before, more than 55,000,000,000 francs' worth of it. And poor old England, that ruled the world's finances before the big war, has barely £130,000,000 in gold.

War does not pay, although the French, able to look ahead, asking and getting what they want, have turned this war into a direction as favorable as possible.

FROM LOUISIANA comes a voice that will cause Wall Street's best minds to toss and burn on their pallets of depression, asking themselves:

"What next, and whence?"

It is the voice of Gov. Long, of Louisiana, saying to farmers and their wives in his state:

"If those that have too much don't take care of those that have too little, those that have too little will go and get it. It is outrageous to have cotton and wheat piled up until you can't see the sun, more clothes than the country could wear out in two years, more grub than it could eat in three years, and yet have people nearly naked and starving and without shelter."

THERE IS NO doubt that individual effort based on selfishness has developed in this country without limit, while neglecting the problem of economical, complete, widespread distribution.

Mr. Chase in a pamphlet recently issued and Gov. Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, in his latest speech, agree that modern civilization demands industrial planning for the whole nation BY THE NATION.

Isolated industrial units based on individual selfishness, producing haphazard, regardless of the general welfare or public demand, will not solve the modern problem.

GOV. PINCHOT says the national government must look after the unemployed, in the coming winter, and demands a government loan of billions to supply work for the idle, echoing a suggestion made months ago by W. R. Hearst.

Gov. Pinchot says that "men of vast wealth" oppose such a loan, because it might add to their taxes. The Governor, a rich man, informs the "vast wealth" that he too pays taxes in the higher brackets, and advises them not to oppose that which is for the general welfare and safety.

The voice of Gov. Huey Long, down in Louisiana, with its vague suggestion of a voice from the tomb of Lenin, may prompt the best minds to permit their richest government to do something.

That "go and get it" observation is unpleasant to the capitalist ear.

MICHIGAN POLICE, thanks chiefly to the head of Henry Ford's own police, caught three murderers in the morning, and that afternoon, baffling lynching mobs, a Michigan judge had the three on their way to life imprisonment. Each man was convicted of four murders, each sentenced to four consecutive life sentences.

Michigan, refusing to disgrace herself by imitating the murderer, has no capital punishment. It is to be hoped that the four life sentences will keep the atrocious criminals in jail.

THEY MURDERED two girls, 15 and 17 years old, and their two high school boy companions. After the murders, of which the details are too horrible for narration, the four bodies were burned in the car in which the bandits trapped them.

These murderers were not the "foreigners" upon whom we

BILL POSTERS OF ARMSTRONG GO TO JAIL

Men Destroying Placards Of Coyne and Mansfield Sentenced to Workhouse

Eight men, accused of tearing down posters of all candidates for County Commissioners except Joseph G. Armstrong, in the Oakland district, were fined $25 each, with the option of 30 days in the workhouse, by Magistrate J. J. O'Connor in Oakland police court today. All went to the workhouse.

Supporters of Senator James J. Coyne, candidate for County Commissioner, last night plastered the City-County Building and the Court House with his campaign posters.

The most flagrant use of the posters was at Diamond and Ross streets, where eight were posted on the City-County Building.

Early this morning employes of the City-County Building were busy washing the signs from that structure.

Police testified the eight men, arrested in Oakland, had been chased in an automobile and arrested in Schenley Park early today. They had been destroying signs of Coyne and Mansfield, police said, but had not molested Armstrong signs, and were posting Armstrong placards. They were charged with disorderly conduct.

Those fined gave their names as Fred Luvara, 69 Magee street; Frank Wallace, 8123 Frankstown avenue; John Smith, 30 Stevenson street; John Carletti, 1331 Locust street; Frank Forncia, 8231 Bricelyn street; Carmine Mardazzi, 8332 Frankstown avenue; Nicholas Medica, 63 Wheeler street, and Thomas Benach, 1307 Locust street.

LINDY, ANNE FLY BERING SEA TO SIBERIA

Colonel, Wife Land Safely On Island After Perilous Crossing of 1,067 Miles

International News Service.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 15.—Conquerors of the treacherous Bering Sea, Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh were today safe at Karagin Island on the northern coast of Siberia.

Their trim seaplane descended near the shores of Asia at 10:49 p. m. last night (Pacific time) after a 1,067-mile hop from Nome, Alaska.

Throughout the perilous journey Mrs. Lindbergh was in communication with the naval radio station at St. Paul Island in the middle of the Bering Sea.

A few minutes before their hop was over, Mrs. Lindbergh sent this message to the St. Paul station:

"We are landing now. Reeling in antenna. Will see you (communicate with you) 9 Greenwich meridian time tomorrow."

Flying conditions on the hop across the Bering were not entirely favorable, Mrs. Lindbergh's messages frequently verified the reports of meteorologists that fogs were heavy over the sea.

However, Col. Lindbergh traveled at high altitude and thus evaded serious difficulties.

At Karagin Island the Lindberghs were to refuel and rest and then proceed to Tokio in two or three easy stages.

The island itself is 60 miles long, and at no place more than 30 miles wide. Situated there is the town of Karagin, sometimes called Karaginsk, the few native inhabitants of which occupy themselves mainly in fur trading.

ROBERT COMFORTING HIS MOTHER, MRS. ELMER RICHARDS, IN THEIR LITTLE HOME TODAY

Father and husband of these unhappy people today is manacled and in police hands and a child, 9 and one of twins, lies in Pittsburgh Hospital near death, the victim, police say, of his father's fury. Police probably saved other members of the family with tear-gas.

SON DYING, GAS SAVES OTHERS

Police Hurl Tear Bomb and Prevent Family Murder; Man Brandishes Ax, Iron

Becoming suddenly insane today a father, police say, crept to the side of a bed occupied by his twin sons, 9, and, using a flatiron, crushed the head of one of them. At Pittsburgh Hospital it was said the injured child, Richard Richards, probably would die.

Police attracted to the rear of 6444 Penn avenue by screams from the home of Elmer Richards, found the door to the upper bedroom, occupied by Richards, his wife and their sons and a small daughter, locked from the inside.

TOSS GAS BOMB

Above the screams of the wife and children rose the maddened shrieks of the man. A minute later they crawled to the roof of a porch and tossed a gas bomb into the room, and as they did so, Richards leaped out and went sprawling to the ground. He was manacled and hurried to East End Police Station.

Richards, according to a son, Robert, 24, lost his mind 16 years ago and was confined in an asylum for several years. Last Tuesday he told the son that he believed he would have to kill his family. Although watched since then the father showed no indication that he was to become violent.

Awakened by the cries Robert, who was sleeping on the first floor, ran upstairs and found the door to his parents' room locked. He tried to batter it down, but

M'GOVERN GIVES MANSFIELD AID

Political straws pointed today to an early union of County Commissioner C. C. McGovern and State Senator William D. Mansfield in their candidacies for the independent Republican nomination for County Commissioner.

A group of Avalon citizens, headed by Harry Quay, attending a meeting last night in independent headquarters, Magee Building, 336 Fourth avenue, showed marked preference for Mansfield and inquired as to his status with the independents.

IRISH WRECK ENGINE IN FEUD

BELFAST, Aug. 15.—(AP.)—A band of about 20 men wrecked a locomotive near Rich hill early today and established a blockade along a railroad line on which delegates to the assembly of the Ancient Order of Hibernian were scheduled to travel.

The gang lifted the rails and stopped a train. They made the engineer detach the locomotive and started it at full speed toward a gap. It smashed up along the right of way and established an effective barrier against further traffic.

Their action was interpreted as a measure of reprisal against the "Irish Republican army," which prevented Orangemen from holding a meeting at Cootehill in the Free State Wednesday.

GANDHI AWAITS ARREST WHILE GROUP SAILS

Leader's Absence Depresses Indian Parley Delegates; Goats Contented at Home

BOMBAY, India, Aug. 15 (AP)—Under dripping clouds and in a melancholy atmosphere, 27 delegates, including several princes, sailed for England today without Mahatma Gandhi to attend the second round table conference on Indian affairs.

Most of them seemed depressed that the Mahatma was not a fellow passenger, for despite the fact he holds radically different political views they respect him as the leader of the common people. They will confer in London in time for the meeting of the Federal Structure Committee on September 7.

Gandhi, spurning England's invitation to participate in the conference unless his grievances are satisfied, disappeared overnight to his retreat at Ahmedabad where he announced he would stay until the government puts me in prison.

Conspicuous among the delegates was Moolan Sparji Jayakar whose frantic eleventh hour efforts failed to compose the differences between Gandhi and Viceroy Willingdon, He said:

It is tragic that relatively minor issues were allowed at the last moment to wreck the chances of Gandhi's presence at the forthcoming conference. I hope MacDonald will ultimately persuade Gandhi to compromise.

Perhaps the most contented travelers today were Gandhi's two pet milch goats who, in view of their master's decision, will escape the spells of seasickness during the present [illegible] monsoon on the heaving Arabian Sea.

He said:

"The District Attorney's duty is to investigate every murder and racketeering crime. He who fails to take the initiative is disloyal to his oath of office. Is he tied too tight with the Kline Crime tag? He has had about two years in office and has done practically nothing. There has been a murder in this county every 90 hours for the last five years and half of them have been unsolved. Since last January there have been 15 bombings, none of them solved.

"Within 500 yards of my home, in the presence of children returning from school, a bootleg king was shot down and killed.

"For a long time the District Attorney did not raise his hand, evidently taking the attitude 'It is not my business. I will prosecute if the police make an arrest.'

"I maintain it is the duty of the District Attorney to initiate an investigation of every murder in Allegheny County regardless of the action of the Pittsburgh police."

"The signs advertising Armstrong's campaign for County Commissioner are everywhere and are contaminating the county. Armstrong tells you that he built the bridges, but McGovern tells you who paid for them.

"Recently a bomb destroyed our neighbor Conley's home and Park said, 'I'll have nothing to do with it.' Later, however, he did send Chief County Detective Murren down here, but instead of inspecting the premises, Murren stayed in the office of our police chief and the only thing we heard of it was that the cause was either gas or a meteor."

McGovern and James O. Cornell, independent candidate for Recorder of Deeds, urged support for the entire ticket.

of the independent ticket, declared:

"It is only a question of time until Mansfield comes here where he belongs."

Deputy Attorney General Ralph H. Smith declared:

"I am for Mansfield. I said so three weeks ago, before the independent movement got under way, and I see no reason now to change."

Meanwhile, County Commissioner Edward V. Babcock left late yesterday for his country home in the mountains near Altoona without a word concerning his expected withdrawal from the County Commissioners race which he entered belatedly last Monday with the assistance of a modern Paul Revere, an airplane and an automobile.

ARMSTRONG, COYNE 'SOLO'

County Commissioner Joseph G. Armstrong and State Senator James J. Coyne continued their solo campaigns for county commissioner with no surface indications that they were getting closer together. Nor was there any sign that Mayor Kline was considering a reported proposal that Armstrong be allowed to name the delinquent tax collector to take care of a possible casualty in the primary election. Kline will spend the week-end in his cottage on Lake Erie, it was reported.

The first break in the field of candidates for County Commissioner and probably the forerunner of others, came today when John J. Duffy filed petition for withdrawal at the County Commissioners' office.

The withdrawal of Duffy puts County Commissioner Joseph G. Armstrong in last position on the primary ballot, a position politicians consider as second to first position.

Gloria 'Certain' to Rewed —Sometime— She Says

NEW YORK, Aug. 15 (AP)—Back from five weeks on the French Riviera, the former Marchioness de la Falaise de la Coudray, now just plain Gloria Swanson again, today declared she "certainly will marry again sometime."

Rumors that she might wed F. Michael Farmer, reputed millionaire of Paris and Dublin, a fellow passenger on the Aquitania, were laid before her. She replied:

"Why don't you ask him?"

Farmer declined to discuss the matter. He will continue to Hollywood on the same train with Miss Swanson. His ultimate destination, he said, is Honolulu.

Asked as to a reconciliation with her former husband, the Marquis, the actress said:

"Everything is possible in this world, but I do not think that is probable."

SECOND BURNED CAR FOUND, NEW TORCH VICTIMS SOUGHT

POLICE ARREST FOURTH MAN, HOLD GIRL

Confessed Slayers Grilled For Clues; River Dragged For Bodies in New Search

International News Service

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Aug. 15.—A sweetheart and a friend were arraigned with Michigan's trio of "torch murderers" today as authorities sought to conclude their investigation of the "petting party" slaying of four high school youngsters.

Prosecutor Albert J. Rapp said both may be charged as accessories in the crime.

Katherine Kelly, 16, blonde sweetheart of Fred Smith, one of the confessed killers, who will be tried in Marquette State Prison, was in custody. Her attorney said she had told the police that Smith, Meadlo and Oliver were with her the night the murders occurred.

FRIEND OF ONE HELD

Howard Fairchild, 24, pal of Dale Blackstone, Negro member of the killer trio, was arrested on suspicion he aided Meadlo in the slaying. He was attended by a nurse at Ypsilanti State Hospital, where he is employed.

Meanwhile Smith, Blackstone and Frank Oliver, with whom life terms which they can hope to get time off for good behavior, were in the state prison at Jackson pending removal to Marquette.

FIND SECOND BURNED CAR

Possibility that another murder may have been committed in the lovers' lane where Thomas Wheatley, Harry Lee, Anita Mae Harrison and William Gold were found cremated in their automobile Tuesday, was seen in the discovery of a second burned car.

Officers dragged the Huron River near by in hopes of bringing up the possible victims, and Smith, Blackstone and Oliver were grilled in the belief they may have perpetrated other atrocities besides the one to which they confessed.

NEGRO TO GET REWARDS

Funeral services for Wheatley and Lee were to be held today at Ypsilanti. The bodies of the girls, who were visiting in Ypsilanti, will be returned to Cleveland this afternoon.

It was announced in Detroit that Frank Johnson, Ypsilanti Negro whose suspicions led to the arrest of Smith, Blackstone and Oliver, would probably receive the $5,000 rewards offered for the solution of the murders.

Blackstone was a roomer in Johnston's home and had given Johnson his revolver as security for rent that was past due.

BETHEL SEEKS STATUS CHANGE

Bethel Township will have to wait 10 years to change from a second to a first class township if it is denied its claim as a first class township, Attorney E. B. Goldsmith asserted at a hearing before Judge S. J. Snee in Common Pleas Court.

He represented William W. Hague, Roy E. Sleppy and Felix A. Gunther, asking a writ of mandamus against the County Commissioners to place names of candidates for first class township office on the primary ballot. The county contended that the act of June 24 last requires a vote of the township to change to first class, invalidating the proclamation issued December 30 under the prior law of 1923. The County Commissioners refused to list candidates for a first class township.

Damage estimated at $500 resulted from a fire in the office of the Lincoln Place Building and Loan Association, on Mifflin road, Lincoln Place, early today. Two attempts have been made to burn his warehouse, a block away, he said.

Degenkolb, a contractor, said a number of records were destroyed in the fire today, and that considerable building material had been destroyed or damaged in the warehouse fires.

CAPT. SIR HUBERT WILKINS

ABOARD THE SUBMARINE NAUTILUS, En Route to Spitzbergen, Aug. 15.—The Nautilus is steaming northward along the coast of Spitzbergen on both engines at a speed that should bring us into Advent Bay late today. In the bay we shall refuel, make final adjustments and fix our course for Wilkes Land.

Up until 7 p.m. yesterday the Nautilus was on a southwesterly course, but then repairs to the port engine were completed.

Our new course was made through open weather, but on occasions we have run into fog. We expect to head up at Advent Bay for 24 hours while the Nautilus is put in shape for the long cruise ahead.

Inside the metal walls of our ship the effects of the warm temperatures are beginning to appear. Condensed moisture forms in beads on every bare metal part, and water drips almost constantly. Soon, most everything will be dripping wet.

As yet we have no complaints about the food. When we reach the ice regions we expect to have temperatures about zero centigrade inside and out.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—(INS)—Roy T. Yates, 35-year-old financier and New Jersey State Senator, was so critically wounded today he was unable to give police his version of how he was shot.

Yates was found shot early Friday in the apartment of Ruth Jayne, 27, an attractive blonde who said she was the Senator's "social secretary."

Miss Jayne was questioned for hours, but revealed little except that a drinking party and a quarrel over finances had preceded the shooting.

Yates, the father of three children, was shot in the abdomen.

Miss Jayne said she had known him for four years and that he paid her apartment rent and gave her between $250 and $300 every month.

Police said Yates was wearing pink shorts and a blue silk pajama coat. Neither showed a bullet hole.

Mrs. Yates visited her husband at the hospital for an hour. He was semi-conscious during her visit.

Gen. Bloom Now The Real Hero Of Yorktown

—By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER—

Must congratulate Congressman Sol Bloom on his recent victory at Yorktown.

Must also felicitate Generals Cornwallis and Washington for waiting that long for the Congressman.

The fact that Congressman Bloom just arrived at Yorktown means nothing. Gen. Howe hasn't got there yet.

Following Congressman Bloom's recent biography on the etiquet of sword-surrendering, Gen. Cornwallis will present the weapon to Washington, feet first.

Gen. Washington will swing the sword three times around his head and will then slash a potato in half in midair.

The potato will be tossed into the air by none other than Congressman Bloom, an authority on potato tossing.

So ends an international affair that promised to become almost local.

Corny extends the sword, Georgie grabs it and Sol gets the publicity.

Berlin Plane Crashes, Woman in Bed Hurt

SHORT-SLEEVED GARMENTS ADOPTED FOR FORMAL WEAR

Sent by Special Wire to Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, Aug. 15 — Buyers are advising their sales staffs to sell sleeves short. It has been found that the short-sleeved frock or coat just takes getting used to. It adds immeasurably to the youthful effect of any model, and for this reason alone should be considered. We used to keep short sleeves for our little sandwiches and for active sports and country clubs. But now we are starting to adopt the short-sleeved look designed for town wear and for formal occasions, and we are liking it. There is a rakish defiant note about it that is really pleasing, and it will serve to make us more careful of the value of the sun on the arms and will yield to make us interested in elbows. And so with the debut of the short sleeve, a modern tan for arms is sounded by the beauty specialist.

THE DRAWING today shows a short-sleeved model as seen at the races. The frock to the left is of Empire green crepe with a half-fitted bodice and partially pleated skirt. The short-sleeved coat is of wool marocain in a deeper shade of green. The sleeves are pleated at the shoulder and diamond shaped insets of the material from the coat at the waistline. The coat is collarless. Accessories include black antelope gloves and black pumps. The hat is of green straw with black satin ribbon.

THE ENSEMBLE to the right of the sketch features the most popular green and brown color combination. The interesting, three-quarter length coat is of leaf green crepe marocain and button down its entire length. The skirt is of dark brown crepe marocain. A panel of many narrow-stitched pleats is set in at the center back of the coat. With this most original feature was worn a small green straw hat with a tiny brush setting low over the forehead on one side and thus repeating the color combination of the dress.

Creepy Film Featured In Penn

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

Murder By the Clock," picture at the Penn, is the picture for [illegible] Any like [illegible] picture setting it attracted was. The billing states that Lucas Tashman and William Boyd are featured. Boyd is prominent and valuable in his part, but principally right in the film is almost wholly dictated by Miss Tashman. She is a revelation as a sort of urbane tigress. Next to her work that of Irving Pichel, Pittsburgh actor whom we do not remember having seen on the screen previously, stands out. He will be seen from now on. He plays an idiot of great physical strength. To hear him laugh is to invite a spell of creeps.

ONE MURDERED TWICE

There are four murders in the picture, two of them being of the same person. Oh, it can't be. Well, see the picture. Every step in it has the precision of a clock.

Before the title. And all of the crime is engineered by Miss Tashman, at the first lady who baffles detectives almost completely. The baffling is in fact, is most thorough until time comes for the ending of the film as such time always comes even in the most puzzling of mystery dramas such as Murder By the Clock."

BOYD IS DETECTIVE

William Boyd plays the detective who finally solves the puzzle and he does a good job of acting, too. As does Blanche Frederici as an aged woman whose will makes the husband of Miss Tashman pay her well with the result that the murder series begins with her and ends with the death of Lester Vail as Miss Tashman's slandestine sweetheart. Regis Toomey and Sally O'Neil are present as nurses for the sake of comedy relief and that pet fever laughs that the cruel jailers of Miss Tashman.

On the stage Star Dust features Eddie Conrad and Marion Eddy in flip tracks and songs. Dancing teams Gold and Raye and Harrison and Fisher and the dancing ensembles of the Chester Hale girls provide nifty steppitz. The Sun-Telegraph Globe Trotter, [illegible] scenes in Hearst Metrotone News, reviewed elsewhere. Dick Liebert organologues a pleasing routine.

THE PONY EXPRESS!

BRONCHO CHARLIE MILLER, 81 — RIDING IN PITTSBURGH

Broncho Charlie, the last of the old Pony Express riders of the Wild West, in Pittsburgh today on his way by horseback from the east to Sacramento and Hollywood over many old trails.

Mayor Greets Pony Express Veteran

Good old Broncho Charlie Miller, 81 now and the last of the Pony Express riders of the Old West, tied his horse in front of the City-County Building yesterday and ambled in to see Mayor Charles H. Kline.

The Mayor was glad to see him, he said, and Broncho Charlie told the Mayor it was mutual. The old rider, who in 61, when 12 years old, rode a stretch of the Pony Express between St. Joseph, Mo., and Sacramento, Cal., is riding to Sacramento and Hollywood, to the former for old times sake, and the latter to appear in some western movies. He and his horse expect to arrive there before Christmas.

Old Charlie told the Mayor some of his experiences, how he broke broncho's above a stage coach, took the buck in a $75,000 stake holdup when he was a driver, and fought in the late World War as the oldest man in the British Army.

Charlie put up his horse in the police stables and planned to spend the night here.

Walter Winchell on Broadway

A Columnist's Sec'y Jots Down a Few Notes

Dear W. W.—Mr. Big Word Tunnes called. Said he wishes it were true about the stork report, for that is one situation he would acknowledge with great alacrity.

Then he neatly broke my cardiums with: "No, this time it is merely a commonplace sacroiliac dislocation." . . . He sends his good wishes, and said he can understand very well how the rumor started up there, for Mrs. T. was in the hospital under a different name, which aroused great curiosity.

Personally, I think the Chamber of Commerce at Damariscotta, Me., ought to thank you for putting the town on the map. . . .

With prosperous results, I hear. . . .

You know what they call the Lido, don't you? A place for the shobs to come and snub each other. . . . The recent excitement at Police Headquarters over the night club kitchen-easy chair is now explained. The cops didn't close the speakeasies and the clubs because of the Gangster State of Things of to clean up Broadway at all. They were closed on complaint of several people who go to bed early. . . . In the Winter things will be quite quiet again, for in the Winter the drunks who are so boisterous when leaving the places won't disturb the early-to-bedders whose windows now are wide open because of the heat. . . . Simple.

Do you know that the pappy of Sylvia Sidney, star of "American Tragedy," is a Forty-second street dentist? . . . Ann Forrest, the actress, is leaving for her home in Denmark before she cannot get work here. . . . Nice girl, Ann. . . .

Here are some similes from L. E. Turner: "That guy's as stingy as a bushel of a Kansas farmer's wheat." And: "His existence was as thin as a business man's pants." . . . Fred Allen phoned . . . said that the bankruptcy of the 101 Ranch Circus was made more solemn because the paymaster kept whistling "Laugh, Clown, Laugh!" . . . John Considine, Jr., is in town; call him. . . . Sent your mother those nice pants.

I stopped payment on that check. . . . Remind me to tell you of the only beer garden open all night! . . . I wish you'd quit flooding me with anybody's grammar. . . . Because some wise guy will crap back at you by quoting Dr. Sayer, one of the greatest authorities on grammar and good English, etc. . . . Let me quote him: "The grammar of a language is made by those who speak it and not by the printers . . . and the idea that the freedom of speech is tied down by rules of the grammarian must be given up, all that the grammarian can do is to formulate the current uses of his time, which are determined by habit and custom, and are accordingly in a perpetual state of flux." . . . That ought to hold you phinicky-phlaw-phinders.

You shattered another of Robert Thornbury's illusions he says. . . . He had always thought the representatives of a certain New York newspaper were known not merely as you called them, "cubs"—but. . . .

Scions of the Times. . . .

Paul Meyer, publisher of Theater Magazine, which folded after 30 years, says he has no intention of reviving it in the Fall, but someone may later, however . . . Every week the Hollywood Theater here was closed it cost the Warners $7,000. . . .

Mr. Ziegfeld called. . . . Said the Goldwyn matter was dead so far as he was concerned and that he had a wire from E. Cantor saying that all that publicity was the result of the efforts of an over-zealous press-agent. . . . Boys will be boys. . . .

You just got under the wire with the Ann Murdock betrothal. . . . Better not hold them so long. . . . Alson's said they won't have your size shoe until next week. . . . What' swelled feet, too?

Here's something to burn you up and knock you cold. . . . The brother of the Pavillon Royal cashier who was also killed by that train wanted to come to New York from the Rye Beach store that he manages for a tea store. . . . They refused to send a substitute man so he could get away. . . . Well a few days later he went to his brother's funeral and the tea store fired him! . . . What kind of a world is this anyhow? . . . That waffle shop on Broadway near Fifty-fourth has a caustic, but humorous sign aimed at the drug store lunch counters. It reads: "Chefs—not prescription clerks—prepare our sandwiches." . . . I like Vicki Baum's "Grand Hotel." . . . Baum's sum-up on Hollywood. . . . She says it's a place where one needs a vocabularly of only two words—"swell" and "lousy." . . . Your opening coast-to-coast hookup is during the week of September 14 via WABC from 8:45 to 9 p. m. "Broadway Time"—R. C.

All In A Day

By Mark Hellinger

Turmoil

GRAVES sat at his desk in the office of the Daily Tabloid and mopped his brow. The reporter felt warm and uncomfortable. A glance at his watch told him it was only 10 o'clock. He sighed. Four more hours of waiting around until he could leave at 2 a. m. Four more hours of deadly dullness, waiting for news to break. He yawned mightily.

His telephone rang. Graves lifted the receiver with a lackadaisical hand.

"Hello, Graves," said the voice. "This is Frank Thomas. I want you to come over to my flat right away. Please don't tell me you're busy. I need you over here. I must see you. Please, Graves."

The reporter said he couldn't get away. But the other man kept pleading, and there was something in his voice that made the reporter change his mind. He said he'd do his best to be over in 10 minutes. He placed the receiver on the hook and walked to the city editor's desk.

"Jeff," he asserted, "a friend of mine just spoke to me in a pretty hysterical fashion. He's an actor, and he hasn't had a job in quite some time. I'm afraid he's liable to knock himself off. Do you mind if I take a quick run over to his flat?"

The city editor granted his assent. The reporter left the office. Downstairs he climbed into his battered flivver and stepped on the starter.

"Nice guy, that Frank Thomas," he muttered to himself. "Hope he doesn't do anything foolish. There are only a few nice guys left."

Thomas' flat was just off Broadway, in the fifties. As he entered the spot Graves sniffed suspiciously. Gas. Just a trace of it. The other man came toward him, and Graves said nothing. He merely smiled.

"I'm glad you came, Graves," Thomas. "Terribly glad you came. I feel miserable. Graves. Wretched. I can't stand this much longer. I can't, I tell you."

The reporter placed a hand on the other man's shoulder.

"Snap out of it, Frank," he murmured quietly. "Everything's going to be all right. What's on your mind?"

Thomas led him to a window and threw it open. Sounds came in. Noises of Broadway. Strange noises. Evil noises. Whistles. Taxi horns. Screams. Loud conversation. The screeching of street cars. The roar of the subways. Queer noises. Noises of Broadway.

"Hear that?" shouted Thomas. "You hear that, Graves? Noise. Nothing but noise. Turmoil always. Turmoil. Nothing decent. Nothing real. Just turmoil."

"What chance have I?" What chance has anyone? I am an actor, but I can find nothing to do. Why should I struggle on? What good will it do? What pleasure can I find in life when all I can hear is turmoil?"

"Listen to it, Graves. Listen to it, I say."

The actor was on the verge of insanity. The reporter recognized the danger the man was in. He thought swiftly and well.

"Look, Frank," he said. "I want you to come along with me. I came over here when you asked me. And now I want you to do this for me. My car is down stairs. Just come along for a short ride."

"It isn't much to ask, Frank. Come on, boy."

A few minutes later the two men left the flat.

Graves drove out to Long Island. He passed through Flushing, Little Neck and Great Neck. Neither man said a word. When Graves reached Manhasset, he turned off the main road. Five minutes more and he came to a huge pair of iron gates. A sign told them it was all very private. But the reporter drove right in.

The actor broke the silence. "Where are you going, Graves?" he asked.

"This is Mr. Jones' place," he replied. "It runs for a couple of miles around here and it's one of the most beautiful spots in the world. It's supposed to be very private, but I've driven around it many times and nobody ever bothered me."

"It's beautiful, Frank. Just look around you."

He stopped the flivver. There was a full moon in the sky. Everywhere there were trees and beautiful flowers. The only sound that broke the stillness was the soft rustling of leaves. The air was sweet and cooling. It was all so calm. And so very, very peaceful. Both men sat quietly for a while. The actor broke the quiet.

"Somehow or other, Graves," he said, "I feel different. The city seems so far behind. The city and that terrible turmoil."

Graves nodded.

"I know," he returned. "I understand. That's why I brought you out here."

The actor turned rapidly.

"I'm going to tell you something, Graves," he cried. "I'm going to tell you how badly I felt. Just before you came in tonight I was going to kill myself."

Graves said nothing. What good to tell Frank that he knew it all along?

"But I don't think I'll do it now," the other man went on. "This Jones' place has done something to me. The air. The surroundings. The peace. It all makes a man want to go on living.

"That Jones must be a very happy man. His hapiness has been made to order. He doesn't have to buck the turmoil the way we do."

Twenty minutes more of silence and Graves looked at his watch. He suggested a return to town. And the actor nodded.

"I don't mind now, Graves," he asserted. "I'll fight it through. And shall I tell you why I'll be able to? Because I'll always feel that somewhere around the corner there may be a place like this for me. A place where quiet reigns—and turmoil is forgotten.

"Maybe I'm silly, my friend, but this little ride has saved my life. We can go back now. And thanks."

An hour later Graves was back at his desk in the office of the Daily Tabloid. It was shortly after 1 a. m. The city editor glanced at him sourly.

"Did you have a nice time?" he inquired sarcastically.

Fair," replied Graves nonchalantly. "I saved the guy's life."

"Baloney," said the city editor.

The following afternoon Graves arose early. Early, that is, for him. He wasn't due at the office until 6 and he was up at the [illegible] on the corner to buy a paper. A headline met his eye.

Jones, steel millionaire, a suicide.

The reporter was startled. This was the very man on whose estate he had been the previous night, the man they had both called Eagerly Graves read on.

John Jones, multi-millionaire steel man, the paper stated, killed himself by putting a bullet through his brain at an early hour this morning on his magnificent estate on Lake Isaac. He left a rather mysterious note which will be investigated by the police.

"I had to do this," the note read. "I can't stand the turmoil."

Mae Murray In 'High Stakes' At Sheridan

By MARGARET RUSSELL

Suave, versatile Lowell Sherman is director as well as actor this week in "High Stakes" at the Sheridian. Mae Murray is the blonde who stacked the cards for the big game, and played and lost.

In the role of Joe Lennox, a bad lad about town with a recurring weakness for writing unsaleable plays, Sherman outsmarts the blonde Dolly, whose speaking voice range plays an interesting tattoo on the ear drums. Joe didn't have anything against Dolly's wide baby stare and powder puff dog, but he did object to her marrying his rich big brother Dick to shake him down.

So Joe goes into a simulated state of inebriation for many weeks, collects evidence against the doll-faced grafter and her oily haired cohort, and with the help of his sweetheart, Dick's secretary, calls a show-down.

The program includes a Louise Fazenda comedy, Pathe News and Silly Symphony sound cartoon, "The Cat's Nightmare," and a Humanettes sketch with Eddie Borden and Ernie Young, "A Reporter in Gangland."

SANTIAGO, Chile, Aug. 15.—(AP).—An open fight for the world's nitrate market appeared imminent as Coach, the government producing syndicate, announced a price cut on natural nitrate in the European market.

"Tangible evidence of the industry's recognition of the small community is furnished by the 415 new factories placed in towns in which out system operates in the past year alone. The pronounced tendency of American industry to spread out into less congested communities shows that manufacturers are coping with the mounting costs imposed by metropolitan congestion. They are awakening to this solution of their production cost problems and accepting the small community's offer of lower taxes and land costs and lower living costs and better living conditions for employes—considerations which overwhelmingly favor the small town as an industrial site.

"An especially strong impetus to the establishment of industrial enterprise in these communities is the advantage of closeness to natural resources.

WELL EQUIPPED

"A closely related movement is the establishment of industrial plants utilizing agricultural products—such as canning and dairying—and such plants, are, of course, best placed in rural communities.

CORN PRODUCTS INVENTORY REDUCED

Company Shipping Goods In Excess of Production Rate; Sales Satisfactory

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—Current sales volume of Corn Products Refining Company, while less than in August, last year, is fairly satisfactory for the season. Last year a drought scare in the summer months increased the normally small business done in July and August, resulting in a smaller sales total in September and October. This was contrary to the normal seasonal trend, which shows the company's sales moving upward from mid-September on into November.

July business of Corn Products this year was approximately 10 per cent under that done in the same month last year. The company's total volume in its domestic plants last year, however, included some goods manufactured for export. The latter activities are now being carried on abroad so that a decline of 10 per cent in the activities of domestic plants is greater than the drop in total business.

CORN MARKET WEAK

The current weakness in the corn market has provided no incentive for users of corn products to buy goods ahead and for that reason there is a fair possibility that the normal seasonal increase in volume will take place in September and October. If this should materialize the fall months may show increases in sales volume over the corresponding period a year ago.

Because of the trend of grain prices and the statistical position of the corn market Corn Products Refining Company currently is operating at the lowest rate of the year and is shipping goods well in excess of the production rate. By this means the company expects to reduce its stocks to the lowest point in its history.

FIRST HALF EARNINGS

Considering conditions earnings of Corn Products Refining Company for the quarter ended June 30 last made a good comparison with the like quarter of 1930 due largely to the increased "other income" obtained as dividends from foreign subsidiaries. Net income in the June quarter was $3,104,883 equal after preferred dividend requirements to $1.05 a share par $25 on 2,530,000 shares of common stock comparing with $3,488,918 or $1.21 a share in the second quarter of 1930. This brought six months' earnings up to $5,494,267 or $1.62 a common share as against $6,641,261 or $2.28 a common share in the first six months of 1930.

In the third quarter of 1930 Corn Products earned $3,529,081 or $1.22 a share on the common stock.

Shell, Indiana in Price-Cutting 'Battle'

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 15. (AP)—A price cutting "war" between the Standard Oil Company of Indiana and the Shell Petroleum Company in the St. Louis and Chicago areas appears to be under way.

The Shell Company announced a reduction of 3 cents a gallon in the price of its highest grade "ethyl" gasoline in the St. Louis Metropolitan and Chicago areas making the price 12.9 cents a gallon in St. Louis and 14 cents in Chicago, tax included. Standard announced a reduction in its regular brand to 9.9 cents a gallon to meet cuts made by Shell earlier this week.

Spectator

Confidence Grows. Seasonal Lull Waning. Favored Stocks.

—By Wall Street Spectator—

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.

WHETHER OR NOT the recovery already witnessed in the market of late is but the forerunner of a more extended upturn in forthcoming weeks it cannot be denied a more confident attitude is being evidenced in important banking and financial quarters.

It is also considered pertinent that one of the street's largest wire houses which has had better than average success in forecasting market turns in the past has definitely changed from its recent stand-off position to the side of bullishness.

IT POINTS out that the halfway mark in the normal seasonal period of summer dullness has already been passed and with the normal fall period of increased activity only a few weeks ahead a broader bullish position is warranted. It goes on to state that "constructive considerations favor improved steel news and car loadings reports over recent level."

Among the industrial stocks favored are the following which in its opinion enjoy strong bullish sponsorship or strong technical considerations:

Air Reduction American Can Westinghouse Woolworth Sears Roebuck Johns-Manville Borden, Digest Public Service of New Jersey, Bendix, Commercial Solvents United Corporation United Gas Improvement United Aircraft Best & Co. National Dairy Products Kroger Grocery Continental Can Loose-Wiles Biscuit Columbia Gas and Electric and General Motors.

A PROMINENT advisory service is advising a switch from Canadian Pacific to Chesapeake and Ohio.

It points out that the former whose recovery will be greatly retarded by a short wheat crop is selling at about 13 times estimated earnings and yielding 6 per cent while Chesapeake and Ohio which will benefit by any recovery in general business is selling at about 10 times estimated earnings and yielding about 7 per cent.

BASIC TRADES IMPROVING

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—The recovery that has already occurred in a few leading individual industries goes a long way to prove that a revival in general business need not necessarily wait for a general rise in commodity prices, according to Poor's Weekly Stock Market Bulletin. It is a mistaken idea that has been curiously prevalent during the past year that business recovery would have to wait for a revival of commodity prices, although a study of the comparative movements of general business and commodities in the past has shown no real ground for this belief. It is true, however, that once the turn does come a general rise in commodity prices will be a very strong stimulus toward accelerating the improvement in general business.

One of the best proofs that business does not have to wait for commodities before turning upward can be found in the cotton textile industry which has now been improving for practically a year while during the same period the price of cotton has continued to decline.

In similar fashion the pickup in woolen and worsted manufacturing occurred while the price of wool was still in the doldrums.

The latest example of improvement that did not wait for commodity prices to go up is presented by the tire industry.

COURT CANCELS SMITH STOCK

WILMINGTON, Del., Aug. 15 (INS)—Chancellor Joseph C. Wolcott in Chancery Court here yesterday handed down an order for the cancellation of all common stock in the S. H. Smith Co. of New York issued to T. B. Pitts, Samuel J. Henry, Albert Attadale, Daniel R. Cunningham and Fred M. Zimmon, members of the board of directors of the firm. The capital stock had been issued by the group to themselves and Chancellor Wolcott in handing down the order, a settled that he could not hold to issue the stock to themselves.

The complaint was registered by five preferred stockholders, Harry M. Blair, George R. Baker, William S. Edwards, Stevenson Newhall and J. Hamilton Orr.

The court appointed Charles C. Reedy of Wilmington as special master to conduct a meeting of the preferred stockholders September 15 at which time a new board of directors and officers are to be elected.

AUGUST RETAIL VOLUME UP

Merchandising as a whole still reflects restricted buying power and lower dollar values according to R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review. August retail trades is being pepped up by special sales and with department stores individual transactions for the month thus far compare favorably with last year. Actual money turnover, however, is about 10 per cent less. Stocks with retailers are reported 15 per cent under a year ago and buying continues on a close basis.

Wholesale jewelers comment that road salesmen are getting but little business, advance orders for the holiday being postponed until September at the earliest. This is a quiet period in the grocery trade accentuated in some communities by poor fate of employment and commodity lines are dull as a whole. Shoes are rather irregular and the turnover in wearing goods is much reduced, this situation holding also in men's clothing.

The building line is dull only one of two speculative projects being under way in the Pittsburgh district and individual dwelling construction lacking in volume. Plumbing supply and sanitary goods manufacturers in the Pittsburgh district are operating at 25 to 30 per cent of capacity, reduced from a year ago. Jobbers stocks are low as a rule, but a great deal of the distribution is now on a brokerage basis, orders being forwarded as received. No immediate gain in volume is indicated and the industry on the average is duller now than heretofore the absence of speculative building being the main drawback.

Collections are irregular. Inclined to slowness, though extra attention in some instances stops losses.

Bank Acceptances Decline During July

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—A decline of $140,170,808 in the volume of bankers acceptances during July almost half of which consisted of foreign credits was reported by the American Acceptance Council.

WOULD SAVE CITY FUNDS

The logical way to eliminate basement storage of rubbish and the garbage can from the back door is to provide standard incinerators in each dwelling. This also will decrease the city's garbage collection costs.

There is no branch of municipal service in the United States that has made so little progress as that of the disposal of garbage. Why does such a condition exist? Because the sanitary collection and disposal is appreciated neither by the general public nor by the city officials. Because it is not realized that such animal and other organic matter can be disposed of in a sanitary way in absolutely but one manner: that is before decomposition sets in.

Each municipality must soon take up this method and devise means of enforcing it. But before action of that nature is enforced each family will become personally interested and incinerate all rubbish and garbage privately not only for the general community good but for their own personal safety and welfare.

Economies Seen in Report Of Columbia Gas

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

COLUMBIA GAS AND ELECTRIC Corporation failed to earn its dividend requirements for the second quarter but the statement indicated a substantial improvement in operating efficiency.

Net profit for the three months ended June 30, 1931, was $5,442,187 after all charges. This compared with net profit of $5,977,132 in the corresponding period of last year. Net for the quarter of this year was equivalent to 34 cents a share on 11,684,220 shares of comomn stock after deducting preferred dividends. A year ago earnings were equivalent to 38 cents a share. Dividends of 50 cents a share are paid quarterly.

The decline from net profit of $8,940,011 or 64 cents a share in the first quarter was largely seasonal since demand for natural gas, which has become the principal part of Columbia's business, almost invariably declines during warm weather.

Earned 98 Cents for Half Year

FOR THE FIRST HALF of 1931 net profit of $14,382,198 or 98 cents a share was only 2 cents a share under dividend requirements. It compared with profit of $16,569,093 or $1.16 a share a year ago.

Columbia's earnings have been lagging behind for the past year. This is reflected in the statement for the 12 months ended June 30, 1931, when profit was equivalent to $1.55 a share against $2.06 a share in the previous 12 month period.

The decline in earnings has reflected the low rate of industrial demand for natural gas due to the current depression.

Economies Indicated

THE NET RESULT of Columbia's statement for the second quarter does not appear to be particularly encouraging but a close examination indicates that important economies have been placed into effect. These have, to a large extent, tended to overcome the influence of smaller sales of gas. They will be more readily apparent when business conditions return to a more satisfactory rate and when new additions to the gas system are in operation.

In the second quarter gross revenues declined $869,519. The economies resulted in a reduction in expenses of $679,373 which went a long way toward balancing the slump in sales. Other income and income from subsidiaries not included in the consolidated statement also gained. Together these items added to $449,307 more to the earnings of the second quarter of this year than to the second quarter of last year.

Net Before Interest Larger

OTHER ITEMS ON THE income account showed only minor changes so that net after all charges including interest and preferred dividend requirements of subsidiaries but before deducting interest on Columbia's own indebtedness was $268,125 more than a year ago. This increase represents exceptionally efficient management in view of the decline in gross revenues.

Early this year Columbia sold $50,000,000 of 5 per cent debentures to provide for its expansion program. In addition it did temporary financing. This was responsible for an increase of $803,070 in interest requirements and accounted for the reduction in net profit after all charges for the second quarter as compared with a year ago.

The increase in indebtedness was incurred to pay for extensions to the gas system, most of which were not completed by the end of the second quarter. Thus, one of the chief contributing factors to the reduction in the company's profit was the burden of the financing of improvements which have not yet reached a productive stage. When additions to operating facilities are completed and in operation, interest charges should assume their proper relation to net earnings.

NATIONAL STEEL BOND ISSUE UNIQUE

$40,000,000 5% Gold Bonds Recently Admitted by New York Stock Mart

The issue of $40,000,000 of first mortgage sinking fund 5 per cent gold bonds of the National Steel Corporation, recently admitted to trading on the New York Stock Exchange, is unique in several respects.

The properties which it covers are almost all owned by various operating subsidiaries. Not only are the capital stocks of these subsidiaries pledged under the issue, but an unusual instrument, namely a mortgage maturing on demand, has been deposited with the trustee by each subsidiary. Each mortgage is a first lien on the fixed assets of the company giving it, with a few minor exceptions, and the aggregate of the mortgages is more than 100 per cent in excess of the face value of the bonds.

PRECEDENT SET

Thus Weirton Steel Company gave a mortgage for $40,000,000, Hanna Furnace Corporation, $2,000,000, Hanna Furnace Corporation, New York, $2,000,000, Great Lakes Steel Corporation, $30,000,000, Michigan Steel Corporation, $6,000,000, and Weirton Coal Company, $2,000,000. The aggregate properties covered are valued at $80,000,000 on the basis of cost less depreciation, which is considerably less than replacement value.

Another unique provision of the National Steel bond issue permits the mortgage to be amended or modified by action of the bondholders at a properly called meeting and within various safeguarding restrictions in the interest of the holders. Although such privileges have frequently been exercised by stockholders in the past in order to protect their interest, this is one of the first instances in which such rights have been provided for the holders of bonds.

Watching Denny St. Clair Make Great Recovery to Win West Penn Amateur Title in Extra-Hole Match

PLAYING OUT FROM FOOT OF A TREE

AND HALVING THE HOLE TO STAY IN MATCH ON SECOND EXTRA GREEN

SAM PARKS, JR. J. DENNY ST. CLAIR

WINNING PUTT ON TWENTY-FIRST HOLE OF FINAL ROUND MATCH

Photos by U. S. Benjamin, Staff Photographer.

Two youngsters, J. Denniston St. Clair, of Williams College and the Indiana Country Club, and Sam Parks, Jr., of the University of Pittsburgh and the Highland Country Club, battled it out in a sensational match of three extra holes for the Western Pennsylvania amateur golf championship at the Pittsburgh Field Club yesterday afternoon, with St. Clair finally winning with a par 5 on the twenty-first green. This after he had to make a miracle shot to keep in the torrid battle on the preceding hole, where his drive landed among the overhanging leaves of a tree to the left of the fairway. He had to play back toward the tee on his second shot, but managed to get a half out of the hole as pictured above. Was it a match!

MOSE MAY MEET GREGORIO AT BOWL

A lad who hurls a hitless game
May win undying baseball fame,
But after that
His work goes flat—
At least he never looks the same.

NO TRUER WORDS ever were written than these few lines by George E. Phair, sports rhymester of the New York American, a Hearst newspaper.

Lefty Burke

Did you ever notice how the best of them flivver and stagger around after entering Baseball's Hall of Fame via the no-hit route? The records are full of the names of pitchers who were kings for a day and never amounted to much thereafter. Perhaps the most tragic case was that of Charley Robertson, who pitched a perfect game for the White Sox, back in 1922, and then developed arm trouble and never was a star moundsman after that. One of this year's no-hit twirlers is Wes Ferrell, of the Cleveland club, a topnotcher, who also contracted arm trouble and hasn't been the same since.

LEFTY BOB BURKE of the Washington Senators, who turned in the most recent no-hit performance in the majors, was dubbing along for four years before he flashed his stuff a week ago, and he will be the exception to prove the rule if he doesn't slip right back into mediocrity. In his first appearance following his classic achievement, he was batted out by the Chicago White Sox in the second inning the other day, after having allowed three hits and walked three batters.

A CERTAIN AMOUNT of luck enters into all no-hit games. And on any given day almost any pitcher who can get them up to the plate on the hop may enter the scrolls of the elite—but only for that day.

ONCE AGAIN THE judgment of those boxing men who contend that the development of local talent makes the sport in any city was vindicated by the turnout of fans for the Mose Butch-Jackie Rodgers battle at Hickey Park, Millvale, a few nights ago. Because of the followings of the two men, the largest crowd in the history of the arena was on hand and the gate totaled close to $4,000, out of which the promoters did not have to pay any carfare or incur other expenses that go with dealing with out-of-town boxers and their managers.*

Earlier in the week, two highly-touted out-of-town boxers, Johnny Jadick, of Philadelphia, and Sammy Dorfman, of New York, paid off on only around $2,200 at the Meyers Bowl. Obviously no cash customers followed Dorfman from New York, nor did any delegation of conters come from Philadelphia to see Jadick box. Importing one out-of-town star to box a good local boxer is good business for any promoter, because it gives the local man a chance to enhance his reputation by beating the visiting topnotcher, but, except in very rare instances, it is a serious mistake to pit two visiting mittmen against each other in a city like Pittsburgh and expect to make money on the show. The local fans are not keenly interested in the outcome of such a battle and usually adopt a "well, what of it?" attitude toward the affair.

IT TOOK THE Buck McTiernan-Jimmy Belmont local rivalry match to turn the Meyers Bowl around the financial corner this season and their return bout there next Monday night promises to pack 'em in again. The sooner the local promoters are convinced that developing their homegrown products and paying them as good percentages as they pass out to out-of-town boxers for their earnest efforts will pay big dividends in the long run, the sooner all of them will establish their clubs on a firm paying basis.

Mose Butch

MOSE BUTCH enhanced his prestige considerably by reason of his victory over Rodgers, a big upset of the lope. The wise money was on Rodgers to win at odds as high as 3 to 1, and his backers are anything but pleased with the run he gave them—or didn't give them—for their coin. He did virtually no fighting at all during the first four rounds and at no time in the battle did he cut loose with the usual power behind his blows, and he was satisfied to pass off his defeat by a local rival too nonchalantic after the bout, with the result that a suspicion has been aroused that he did not give his best efforts, whether purposely or otherwise.

Coming on the heels of his recent suspension for his messy third bout in his series with Johnny Datto at Motor Square Garden last season, this is unfortunate and may not be fair to Rodgers, but it is the public reaction to his exhibition and he is likely to be called upon the official carpet and warned to quit posing and letting the other fellow do all of the fighting in the early rounds of any bouts in which he may engage here in the future. The referee called him to account as early as the latter part of the opening round against Butch.

WHILE RODGERS DISAPPOINTED in no small degree, this should take none of the credit away from Butch for his fine fight. The Oakland southpaw entered the ring with few persons conceding him a chance to win against his more experienced and harder hitting opponent and with even money being laid that he would be knocked out, yet, in the face of these odds, he took the*

ST. CLAIR WINS WEST PENN AMATEUR

By VERN SWARTSFAGER

For the first time since 1916 that's 15 years ago the Western Pennsylvania amateur golf championship tourney final went more than the regulation 18-hole limit yesterday when J. Denniston St. Clair, representing the Indiana Country Club but pledging allegiance to Kiski and Williams College as well, defeated Samuel M. Parks, Jr., of Highland, University of Pittsburgh golf team captain, 1 up in 21 holes, at the Pittsburgh Field Club.

In 1916, William C. Fownes, Jr., the man who donated the cup emblematic of the present championship, holed out a 40-foot putt for a birdie 2 on the third and twenty-first hole at the Allegheny Country Club to defeat Eben Byers, internationally-recognized golfer, for the championship.

MATCH WELL PLAYED

Yesterday's conquest between two youngsters, for St. Clair is only 20 and Parks hasn't reached his twenty-third birthday, produced the finest match play seen in this sector in many years. It was thrilling, keen and spectacular, and those who won on St. Clair, and he won deservedly might just as well have lost on Parks, because both finalists played their hearts out in trying to attain the senior district gonfalon.

St. Clair had a medal card of 76 and Parks an approximate 77, for the regular 18 holes of play, and after that it was Lady Luck who held the upper hand. Not that Denny won by a lucky break he fought every putt to gain his present honor—but the little cup in every green grew smaller and smaller as the youngsters piled up hole after hole in their effort to gain that most coveted of titles.

Denny had won the West Penn junior championship a couple of years ago, and in spite of the fact he came to the tourney hardly fully recovered from a severe case of ptomaine poisoning, had a distinct yearning for the title this year. Parks wanted it as he wanted nothing else, and he has

PIRATES, PHILS CLASH TWICE

BELIEVE IT OR NOT — By RIPLEY

(Reg. by U. S. Patent Office)

(On request, sent with stamped addressed envelope, Ripley will send proofs and details of anything depicted by him in these cartoons.)

EXPLANATION OF RIPLEY'S CARTOON OF YESTERDAY: THE STATUE ERECTED IN HONOR OF A CROOK—Karl Ludwig Kurtze, a native of Germany, embarked on a life of crime at the age of 12 (1869). During his amazing criminal career he assumed 20 different aliases and was in succession a soldier, sailor, conspirator, policeman, U. S. Consul, financier, blackmailer and desperado. An extraordinarily handsome appearance made him a great favorite with the ladies, 12 of whom he married and deserted. He raised considerable capital in the city of Trieste, Italy, by pretending to be the only survivor of a group entrusted with the burial of a treasure amounting to $3,000,000 by President Kruger, of Transvaal. The city proclaimed him a public benefactor and had a statue erected in his honor on the public square. He was acquitted of murder, but received a sentence of 20 years' penal servitude for extortion.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 15.—The Pirates faced another doubleheader today, this time the Quakers to furnish the opposition. The Emmen came over from New York last night, but few of them were in a happy state of mind, a defeat sustained just before leaving the metropolis carrying a big sting.

Skipper Ens was a bit disgusted with the performance of his players yesterday, as they allowed a kid lefthander to hand them a 2-to-1 setback. Jim Moore's southpaw, rookie pitcher of the Giants, made his major league debut as he faced the Pittsburgher.

PIET MAY PLAY

Tony Piet is slated to join the Pirates here today and in case the Wichita star is available for duty he may swing into action immediately at second base. Big Jim Elliott is due to face the Pirates and Ens would like to have either Piet or Grooms in the battle. Howdie is out with a bad leg.

Says Nick Altrock

—Baseball's Comedian—

CHICAGO, Aug. 15.—The pennant races may be over, Jennie darling, but remember the tortoise and the hare. Of course, the [illegible] leaves in both leagues look like they had turned to turtle, but there is always a chance. Nothing is certain in baseball except Judge Landis' dislike. The Athletics and Cards look set to make history, take a carpenter's rope of it, sell it, but you never can tell. A few years ago the Pirates blew a five-game lead and the pennant to the Giants in one series. However, this year you could write the Giants' chances in a 10-word telegram and still have room left to send love and kisses.

SCOTTIE STAR WINS EIGHTH

Lee, Scottdale's star hurler, won his eighth game in a row yesterday, defeating Clarksburg, 14-6, as the Scotties kept pace with Johnstown in the hectic Middle Atlantic League second half race.

At Fairmont, Beaver Falls nosed out the Black Diamonds, 6-2. Beckley was a run better than Youngstown, taking a 3-2 decision, and at Charleston, the Generals defeated Huntington, 2-1.

Johnstown walloped Wheeling, 14 to 6, and Cumberland had an easy time downing Charleroi, 7-1.

Local Women Lose In Asheville Play

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The co-medalist, Miss Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., and Miss Daisy Rice Bartlett, of Birmingham, Ala., yesterday eliminated the Goldsbury family from the Asheville Country Club's women's golf tournament and will meet tomorrow in the finals.

Miss Cothran experienced no trouble in defeating Miss Virginia Goldsbury, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Miss Bartlett, playing Miss Goldsbury's mother, Mrs. R. I. S. Goldsbury, found the going much tougher against an opponent of considerable experience but managed to gain a 2 and 1 margin.

YATES REACHES TITLE ROUND

MONTREAL, Quebec, Aug. 15.—(AP)—Arthur (Ducky) Yates, of Rochester, N. Y., and C. Ross (Sandy) Somerville, of London, Ont., the defending titleholder, advanced to the final round of the Canadian amateur golf championship yesterday. They will play 36 holes for the crown, now worn by Somerville, today.

Both finalists scored in easy fashion in the semi-final round. Yates whipped Jack Cameron, of Montreal, 6 and 5, while Somerville was disposing of Bob Morrison, of Victoria, 7 and 6.

VIGNETTES OF SPORT

CONNIE MACK started something when he said recently that in Al Simmons he has a greater star than Ty Cobb Babe Ruth Honus Wagner or any of the other immortals . . . No one challenges Simmons greatness but the other fellows were good too and comparisons are odious and it's all a matter of opinion anyway . . . So far as that goes a Chicago critic opines that when it comes to a question of the most valuable man in baseball he's none other than Branch Rickey the brains behind the Cardinals . . . Time was when Rickey who came to the majors from the collegiate athletic realm was merely a crafted-at theorist but you can't very well laugh off four pennants in six seasons with Rickey's much-discussed farm system at the bottom of it all.

Leonard Koenecke

JOHNNY JADICK, the Philadelphia lightweight, who has been flashing his stuff around here recently, is the young man responsible for the comeback of Tommy Loughran to the ranks of the contenders for the heavyweight championship Loughran was going to quit the sport after his knockout by Jack Sharkey a few years ago, but Jadick began to work out with him at Wildwood, N J, and got Tommy around to thinking that maybe he ought to make another stab at regaining the heights And he has come back like nobody's business.

WHAT'S ALL OF this depression talk about when the New York Giants can pay the Indianapolis Club the equivalent of $75,000 in players for Outfielder Leonard Koenecke, to be delivered next spring? It was only the other day that a fellow was telling us there wasn't any such money around any more And just think, this $75,000 beauty's name is doomed to read something like K'n'be in the box scores Cagnie Mack pooh-poohs the idea that base-stealing is coming back to popularity in the major leagues, with home run hitting due for a setback . . . Well, just so we don't get any more clubs like the Brooklyn Robins, who can be wrong oftener than Jack Sharkey.

ST. CLAIR COPS W. PA. TITLE

had more experience in national competition than St Clair but it was not to be.

The Highlander passed up more than one chance to gain an advantage on St Clair and when he passed them up St Clair was wise enough to profit by them For instance he three-putted from 10 feet on the third hole in the morning the scene of his defeat in the afternoon and he missed two great big two-foot putts that would have almost made his title chances secure these on the fifteenth and sixteenth holes being particularly black-marked against him

Both finalists played splendid golf St Clair won the praises of the large gallery when he used his head on the second extra hole He was under a tree to the left of the green while Parks was out off the green on their drives St Clair refusing to give up in despair played a safe shot back to the fairway stroked an uncanny approach close to the pin and when Parks was unable to sink his birdie 3 he halved matters in par 4 That was sturdiness of the stomach so to speak and one of the little things that brought the championship home to Denny.

EVEN AT NINTH

Going out on the first nine holes Parks evened the match with spectacular playing on the ninth hole and then after they had halved four holes in succession and Parks gained a 1-up advantage on the fourteenth he loosed it away like nobody's business by failing to negotiate putts of less than two feet on the fifteenth and sixteenth holes

To speak of their good golf would fill a book The glory and praise of yesterday's final should go to no one player Both of them showed the large gallery that they knew the game from A to Z and likewise had the stamina to back themselves up A final glance at their cards tells the story far more briefly and just as effectively Their cards

Sometimes It's Necessary to Fight for Happiness

She loves a Big Fit of Pouts . . .

Loves him like that well-known Nitwit, Sweet Alice, of ye ancient Ballad.

"Oh, don't you remember
Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt?
"Sweet A-a-lice with hair so-o brow-ow-ow-n.
"Who wept with delight
"When you gave her a smi-i-ile.
"When you gave her a smi-i-ile.
"And twemb-b-bled with fear at your frown."

Nice mess o' moans wasn't she? And so's Mary. What the Big Boy does to Mary is nobody's business! Yet in spite of her spinelessness she can't quite decide whether she should marry him or not.

"Dear Sally:

"Out of your store of experience and wisdom, could you advise me on the problems that confront me? I hope you can, for I don't know what to do.

TEMPERAMENTAL

"Point blank — would you marry a man who was temperamental . . . who adored you one day and ignored you the next, yet, who, even when he ignored you and showered attentions on other women, you knew loved you above all others in the world?

"Would you knowingly enter a life that would rob you of the peace of existence, such as babies, picnics and the like? Would you marry a man into whose life you would have to submerge your very being, catering to his moods and forgiving his transgressions? On the face of what I have written so far, I would be a fool to think of it, wouldn't I? I know it sounds that way. But, on the other hand, I love him, and no other man has ever, or could ever reach my heart as he does.

"We do have wonderful days together, when birds sing, the sun shines, and we laugh long and happily. Then, after that, come the dark, dreary days that hurt me cruelly.

FEARS FUTURE

"Oh Sally! Please! Tell me what you think! Would you marry such a man? Should I put him out of my life now, before it is too late? Or should I take a chance on what happiness I might have with him, in spite of these things?

"When I am with him, I think only of the present. I am frightened of the future, for I need love, always, and have a fear that though he does love me, and always will, yet he will wander in the by-paths maybe some day, in spite of that, and mortally wound me.

"MARY."

Would I marry this Big Noise? Not unless all the pleasanter forms of suicide had failed, sister. Personally he sounds to me like a bad cross between delirium tremens and a dose of hives—but some girls certainly do like to get mangled.

"But I need love so," you wail. Then go where you'll get it. This man doesn't love a thing on earth but himself, and never will. Your only use in his life is to serve as a Yes-chorus or a football.

Nor is that altogether his fault. Why should any man show you respect or consideration if you won't respect or consider yourself? Why should any man hold you dear if you hold yourself cheap? Men value a woman who puts value on herself.

FIGHT FOR HAPPINESS

You're not fit to marry any man until you develop more gumption. You're not fit to be loved or honored until you make yourself worthy of love and honor.

Snap out of it! Stop lying down and inviting a steam roller to run over you. Stop standing for this man's tantrums, selfishness and neglect! Tell him that if he can't treat you as a fine woman deserves to be treated, you're through! And then don't back down. The chances are that he's hopelessly selfish, and not worth wasting your time on anyway. But maybe if you stop two-timing yourself by showing you're willing to take any bone he throws you, he may change. If he doesn't, give him the air. But remember, whether you marry him or some other man, it's up to you to fight for your happiness, and if you won't do it, you don't deserve any.

'MY FATE'

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

Aunt Sunnyside — or — Aunt Cantankerous?

Pondered, one day, Gloriette, lifting, daring, the Future's Curtain.

"Even so beautiful a young lady as me—I, if I have imagination or intelligence behind this alabaster brow of mine, must wonder, feeling a bit pale inside, what kind of an old lady, when old lady I am, that I will be! If I have eyes to see the different levels and types of the Old Ones that live around me and go by me, then I must know, KNOW in my heart that some day, not eternities away, I will be one of the Old Ones. Hard as it is to fix in mine, and my admiring family's and my sweethearts' mind, there will slowly come gray hairs that will sneak in one by one, as I have seen them do in my mother's once wonderful ginger-bread-brown hair, replacing each gold one; some day I will acquire a wrinkle (impossible!); some day my cheek will strangely not be round any more; my eyelids no longer of the luscious, dewy texture of a glistening lily petal, some day I will still be me—and yet not me; not THIS me!

"So—seeing that this is something I cannot run away from, pretend not to see, pray, or argue, or mock, or pay my way out of when some day I am an old, old lady, I should like to know what kind of a one I am all set to be. "Easy," says my intelligence. What I am being now, more and more, is what I will be then. I am now the faint chalk sketch of the finished portrait of either a dear and beloved, or a mad and dreaded old lady! The daughter is mother to the aged woman. I am the live portrait, now, and what I am to be is a faint chalk sketch.

I will have to be thin or fat, kind or cross loved or borne with. And so, by all means Gloriette, since, though you cannot change the old and the thin or fat, you can be just exactly what you choose about the other adjectives—then get busy growing your own portrait of a dear old lady, smooth frowns out, began being a tolerant one, a kind, young loving, jolly, good tempered, soft tongued OLD ONE.

"But—heigh-ho and goody goods! That's a long way off for me."

Surprise Wedding Announcements

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. To whom should surprise wedding announcements be sent?

2. Should we tell my husband's mother or would it be proper not to send her an announcement?

3. To each of my employes? There are about 30.

READER.

1. Wedding announcements of any kind should be sent to the lists of relations and friends of the bride and the groom. When there has been a wedding to which friends and relations have been invited the announcements are not sent to the people who have been invited to the wedding. But in the case that you mention the announcements should be sent to all the friends and relations of the couple.

2. Indeed it would be proper and the only kind thing to do to tell your husband's mother that the wedding had taken place. It would be incredibly cruel for you to have her receive the first news of the wedding by means of the engraved announcement. Don't do this thing. I beg you, and persuade your husband not to do it. Such hard treatment of the mother of your husband would make you most unhappy when you realized her unhappiness.

3. It is neat form to send a separate announcement to each person. This honors the person to whom the announcement is sent.

The Gentleman Waits

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When a young lady meets a gentleman with whom she is acquainted, should she wait until he smiles and raises his hat, or should she say "Hello" first?

A. R.

It is the privilege of the lady to acknowledge the acquaintanceship with a gentleman. Therefore she bows or speaks first. And a gentleman waits for this acknowledgment.

How to Keep Well

Oxygen as a Medicine Has Saved Many Lives

Oxygen is a gas found in the air. It is one of the elements vital to the sustenance of life.

In larger and purer doses than we get in ordinary breathing, oxygen is used as a curative agent in certain diseases. The value of this was greatly appreciated during the World War in the treatment of gas poisoning. In addition, the gas is employed in certain stages of pneumonia.

Dr. Copeland

Following the discovery that this gas is important in combating disease, its uses have been many. Oxygen is now prescribed for various diseases and many lives have been saved by its vitalizing effects.

In pneumonia, as a result of a material decrease of normal lung tissue, there is too great a limitation upon the quantity of air. The body gets less oxygen than it needs. It follows, of course, that any means of giving more oxygen will benefit the patient.

The old-time and tragic effects of diphtheria are rarely seen in this generation. Due to our modern methods of guarding against this dread disease, we seldom see it.

In a severe attack of diphtheria, the windpipe of the struggling child becomes partially closed. Almost at once the body suffers from the lack of oxygen. In such cases the administration of oxygen has carried many a sufferer through the crisis of the disease.

Resuscitation from the evil effects of exposure to illuminating gas or from immersion in water, has been made possible by giving oxygen. In these cases, it has saved many lives.

A very important use of oxygen has been in reviving infants at birth. Tiny infants born blue, with great difficulty in breathing, have given the attendants many anxious moments. If not properly handled, such babies will die because of their inability to breathe. In these cases oxygen has been miraculous in its action. Many a happy mother can give thanks to the use of this gas in resuscitating her infant.

There are other important uses for this valuable gas. As time goes on, science discovers more and more methods of combating disease and death. We have progressed tremendously since the days when our forefathers and foremothers depended on "herbs" and "leeches" for overcoming disease.

Heart of a Wife

Continuation of Love's Reawakening

By ADELE GARRISON

Farmhouse Is in State of Siege as Inmates Await Developments

Neither Lillian nor I made the slightest protest against my father's dictum that she must see that I went to bed at once. I think even Lillian felt that, as my father had pointed out, there was no possible need of either of us being burdened with the plans for the guarding of the farmhouse and the children which he and Dicky and Harry were outlining because of the threat. The one brought to us by the Chinese messenger which had just been confirmed by the bizarre letter wrapped in oiled silk which the men who had perpetrated the pretended bank robbery and drowning had tossed into the yard enclosed in a pseudo bomb less than an hour before.

"All right, chief," Lillian said. "That goes double with me. I'm going to climb into bed as soon as I see that Madge is safely between the sheets."

I'm not a baby," I told her, when as I paused at my room door, she pushed past me through it and began arranging the tumbled bedclothing from which I had risen startled and terrified when the message had come from the bank of the attempt of the bandits to get into it.

"No," she answered, "but you had one only a month ago, so you're fair game for all the amateur nurses in the neighborhood. Now crawl in here if for nothing else than to give me a chance to imitate your example. I'm dead down to my feet, and they're going to give out in another minute."

As she tucked me in and gave me an affectionate little pat of farewell I saw that her face in the inexorable daylight was gray and etched deeply with lines of fatigue. But her eyes were luminous and I knew that the memory of that moment with her husband which I knew had blotted out every recollection of the hurt she had given him, was bearing her spirit triumphant over all fatigue.

With the utterly relaxed feeling of one who had just come safely through an experience of stress and terror, I was sound asleep in what Katie calls "an jiffy," conscious of but one disturbing question: When and where should we next hear from the Chinese who had sent so threatening a message concerning Marion's locket-box.

But that was a question not answered for several days, and in the meantime we lived as if we were in a stage of siege. The Tiers, who of necessity had been taken into our confidence in part, although we kept from them all the details we could, kept vigil upon all passers-by. It was a necessary measure, my father thought, but Jerry nearly drove us frantic by his frequent telephones that "somebody queer" was coming our way. That "somebody queer" invariably turned out to be a perfectly harmless person, but we submitted to his vagaries because of the possibility that if he cried Wolf often enough, one of his cries might possibly protect us.

Though they did not disclose the details of their preparations I knew that my father and Harry Underwood had summoned three or four of the roving adventurers who had shared their lot in past strenuous times, and were always eager to come to their aid anywhere, at any time, and posted them at vantage places near the farmhouse. Mrs. Tiers boarded and lodged them and my father was footing those bills as well as those for the services of the men. I knew this from overhearing fiery protests from Harry Underwood, who said that the fuss was all over his stepdaughter's property, and that he felt responsible for the bills. Even he had to give way, however, to my father's quiet obstinacy.

On my father's tip also the state troopers were on the watch for any appearance of Chinese in Sag Harbor or in near-by territory. They had also been taken into my father's confidence to a greater extent than has been his wont in government problems and the officers, who have the greatest respect for his position and achievements, managed with Mrs. Corwin's aid to keep all mention of his connection with the thwarting of the supposed attempt at bank robbery out of the rampant publicity which followed the running of the blue sedan into the bay. The investigations incidentally ran into the usual dead-end street. It was discovered that the sedan was a stolen one. A motorboat belonging to one of the estates on North Haven was found adrift in the bay, uninjured, but no one save our group at the farmhouse in the secret of that pretended drowning guessed that it had any connection with the missing bandits. The bay was dredged for days with, of course, no trace of bodies. The sedan was empty of any incriminating possessions, even the two hats found floating in the bay were of a brand put out by the thousand, and it was found impossible to trace them.

It was Dicky who thought of pursuing further, for our own benefit, a line of investigation which he cynically declared the police would soon declare closed satisfactorily.

"Luckily, the license number on that blue sedan was noticed while it was careening around Sag Harbor," he said upon the morning of the second day after our bizarre experience while he was preparing for an early journey into the city. "Of course, it was a stolen car and the owner no doubt has rushed to a police station long before this with his complaint. But I've got a hunch I'd like to see what a good private investigator could dig up about that owner."

Children's Fears

By CONSTANCE CAMERON

Even for the most intelligent, careful mother there sometimes comes a problem in the fears of her child which are induced by circumstances of which she knows nothing until informed of them by the child himself.

Fear and caution are so closely intertwined that it is hard, when trying to teach caution, not to make the child timid and fearful.

Fear is one of our oldest and most protective emotions. It leads in the logical brain to preparation, in the distorted brain, or the one unused to figuring things out, to panic and hiding. The obvious thing to do in relation to children and their fears is to make those fears the cornerstones of reasoning; never to force the child to suppress and hide them which in turn leads him to a loss of self-confidence and to timidity.

Had the Stone Age warrior not feared his opponents he would never have studied and finally hit upon the idea of assembling an equal number of his own men for defense.

Had the business man no fear of the rainy day he would never budget his salary and build a bank account.

Fear can be used as a constructive force by wise guidance. It can be a dangerous thing if not met with frankness and logic.

Don't make fun of your child when he says he is afraid to face his class and recite his poem or when he cries and pulls back at his first swimming lesson. Every time you laugh and say "It's silly to be afraid" you are pushing fear back into the dark, moldy recesses of the child's nature where they will do him great harm.

When he tells you he is afraid, find out WHY he is afraid. Help him to overcome both his fear and the situation he is afraid of. But let the fears come to LIGHT. Never laugh at them. Make them cornerstones of self-control.

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

Eyebrows that bush out belligerently can be tamed and kept in order by applying brilliantine with a small brush. Wild hairs should be removed with the tweezers. Mascara, put on carefully, is a good darkening agent.

When walking the heel is lifted first and the weight of the body falls almost directly on the big toe. If narrow shoes press the big toe in toward the foot, body balance is interfered with. There is also a condition present that makes possible the formation of a bunion, than which among foot ills there is nothing worse. Any sort of crippling of the toes has a bad effect upon the spine and body posture.

Physicians and surgeons do much to repair nature's errors, make human beings more presentable. Teeth that are crowded or not properly placed are set in order. Babies' bowed legs are straightened by putting their little dogs in shoes that are designed to make circular pins straighter. Facial defects that cause self-consciousness and misery are repaired. Superfluous hair is banished. The world is a better place now that beautifying isn't looked upon as a social crime.

The Cardiac Clinic

By DOROTHY ROE

"What's keeping my Prince Charming?
I've been waiting patiently.
It's really most alarming—
Where can he be?"

There's been a lot of commotion lately about the depression in the marriage market.

When stocks and bonds go down, it seems there also appears a shortage in wedding rings.

And a girl's Prince Charming may be very late in arriving since he had to sell his horse.

At our smartest beaches and gathering places we see the so-called eligible bachelors going into wary huddles, scattering their favors charily among the watchful debutantes, avoiding the appearance of courtship in any form.

It's really a drastic situation and something ought to be done about it.

The old order of the pursuing male has reversed itself.

The day has passed when a girl had only to sit on her front porch and wait for the suitors to come swarming.

Any attractive young man nowadays knows that his company is at a premium, and conducts himself in the most high-handed manner accordingly.

When he bestows the favor of his attentions upon a maiden, he expects her to burst into grateful song at once, and warble, "Luckee girl!"

He no longer deems it necessary to come a-calling on his lady love with a polished coach and four.

If he calls her up and invites her to drop in at his apartment, he considers that he is being very generous indeed.

Love has degenerated into a sort of old army game, where fate is against the novice from the beginning.

And it's a wise girl who can manage to keep her beauty in the old accepted state of adoration and adulation.

Soon, I suppose, the gentlemen will be expecting us to send them flowers and cigarets, and go about stretching our evening wraps over the mud puddles for them.

The girls, I dare say, will be forming the stag lines next at dances.

And if such could be the case, what a difference it would make!

If men really depended for their popularity on the public pursuit of the opposite sex, as girls have done for all these ages, it would be a different story.

For the most prized possession of the male is his vaunted charm for the ladies.

And if he were reduced to waiting until some supercilious deb casually bestowed a favor upon him, his anxiety would be just as great as has been hers, since the days of the Garden of Eden.

I think it would be a good idea to reverse the roles in public for a while, as they have been reversed so long in private.

Then a girl could pursue her man in the open, instead of having to resort to the age-old camouflages, and the world would applaud.

What do you think? Write me, care of Universal Service, 63 Park Row, New York City.

Soiled Jewelry

The costume jewelry so popular just now is very effective but very apt to stain one's neck and arms if not kept nice and clean. Give it a bath in baking soda and water occasionally, rinsing and drying carefully afterward. This will do away with those greenish marks.

Fanchon Takes New Friend Into Her Confidence

CHAPTER III.

At dusk they landed at the flying field outside of the small town in which they were to spend the night. There was a hotel of sorts and accommodations had been arranged for them. On the ground they were all a little stiff, a little cramped. Mrs. Eames confessed to a headache. She would, she said, go early to bed as they were to start directly after dawn on the morrow. The pilot, the mechanic and the steward vanished, it seemed, into thin air; they were taking the plane back, on the following day. Another plane, another pilot and mechanic would continue the trip. "I had a chance," Eames told Fanchon and Evelyn, when they had arrived at the hotel, had washed up and inspected their rooms and were dining together on the best the hotel could afford, "to charter the planes from this particular company at less than usual rates. A friend of mine," he said importantly, "backed it."

He added that he and his wife and son had wanted to make the two-stop flight rather than what he termed the regular "train and air trip. More unusual," he explained complacently. He was Fanchon learned, from Jersey President of almost everything in the town. She had a swift mental picture of him addressing some business men's luncheon club on the future of aviation. His son, it seemed, wished to go into the commercial end of it. . . it was for his sake, Mrs. Eames had added, that they were taking the trip.

After dinner everyone went to their rooms. Fanchon undressed and lay down on the narrow bed and stared through the one window. It was still and warm. She couldn't sleep. She was bone tired, but she couldn't sleep. If only there were someone to whom she could talk, of whom she might ask advice.

HAPPY EXPECTATIONS

A knock at her door. "May I come in?" asked Evelyn Howard.

Fanchon called out: "Please do," and Evelyn, in a silk kimona and floppy mules, her hair neatly waved with combs and the combs held in place with a net, advanced a cold-creamed face into the room. "My room is dreadfully hot, hotter than this," she complained. "I can't sleep, I'm too excited."

She sat down on the bed beside Fanchon and began to talk. She hadn't, she said, any idea of what Mrs. Carstairs' plans might be. "That they would include Southampton, Newport, Park Avenue, Europe, the best shops, the most expensive clothes and marvelous good times, she hadn't the least doubt." She sat, hugging her thin knees, her rather pale blue eyes illuminated with expectation. "After all these years of school teaching," she exclaimed, "it will be too wonderful! Breakfast in bed, a maid of my own! Someone to sew on straps. I've always hated straps," she confided.

Synopsis

While the newsboys shouted, "All about the big gang killing," Fanchon Meredith and a man named Tony planned their getaway. Tony gave Fanchon $4,000 and reserves passage for her under the name of "Miss Smith" on an airplane chartered by the wealthy Mr. Eames en route to New York. A fellow-passenger whom she previously had met on the boat coming from Hawaii recognizes Fanchon. She is Evelyn Howard. Evelyn is going to live with the wealthy Mrs. Allison Carstairs, an aunt whom she has never seen. Fanchon envies Evelyn living in happiness, while she is trying to escape because she was Tony's girl—Tony, who lied his way through life and whom she had innocently accepted on face value.

Now Go On

Fanchon laughed. Somehow that touch made Evelyn seem more human, a little more likable. She wasn't, after all, such a bad sort. "How old are you?" Fanchon asked the other girl idly.

"Twenty-four. I've been teaching since I was 18 and I'm fed up with it. But that's all over now. We must see something of each other when we get to New York," Evelyn rattled on. "What are your plans?"

"I haven't any. I'll go to work, I suppose," Fanchon replied dully.

EVELYN INQUISITIVE

"What sort of work?" Evelyn wanted to know. She had already the air of tolerant curiosity displayed by the female of leisure towards the female who must earn her living.

"I don't know. I'm not trained for anything. In San Francisco I did some substitute library work and then," said Fanchon smiling, "I modelled dresses."

"You could, of course, with your figure," Evelyn remarked. "But . . . well it isn't a nice occupation is it? Maybe Aunt Jennie would help you to find something. But must you work?" she asked.

"Ladies must eat." Fanchon reminded her, arms behind her head, black curls on the pillow, turquoise eyes fixed on the ceiling.

"But I thought your father . . . the plantation . . . ?" began Evelyn hesitantly.

"Yes. So did I. But after his death it was all badly bungled by a dishonest manager and lawyer. There wasn't much left. A little life insurance."

"I see. Then . . . but you must have saved a lot to make this trip," remarked Evelyn in honest astonishment, "and there wasn't any hurry about your getting East was there? I mean, boat or train would have done as well?"

"A friend gave me the trip," said Fanchon slowly. But she flushed.

TELLS OF ROMANCE

Suddenly she turned and regarded the other girl. She didn't know her well, knew her in fact scarcely at all. And she seemed a rather foolish little person. Yet in a way sympathetic. If she confided in her . . .

If she asked for her advice, asked her to enlist the aid of the powerful Mrs. Carstairs in her behalf? Would it be wise? Could she trust her? Yet, trust her or not she had to tell someone! Her knowledge, her hard-bought wisdom, the peril of her situation, was eating at her heart. She had to tell it or go mad. She said impulsively:

Evelyn, I'm in terrible trouble. I must tell someone. May I tell you? Will . . . will you keep my confidence safe?"

Her eyes pleaded. She looked, thought Evelyn Howard with a pang of envy, extraordinarily beautiful. Not particularly drawn to her, jumping at the usual sordid conclusions as to the form that trouble might have taken, she nevertheless leaned forward, impelled by curiosity and said: "Of course. Do tell me. Perhaps I can help you."

Fanchon drew a long breath. "I'll have to go back," she said, "to the beginning. You know that my life was spent on the plantation. With my father. And that when he died I came to San Francisco. You know, now, that there wasn't much money. I had to get work. Through a friendly woman at the YW where I first stayed I got this substitute library work. I met him there."

"Him?" asked the other girl, curiously.

"Tony—Tony—his other name doesn't matter." Fanchon caught herself up. "he came in to get books. He was—very good-looking. An Italian-American. I—he came often," she said after a moment remembering Tony, leaning across the round desk polished by the elbows of so many students and searchers after knowledge, his gay eyes laughing into hers . . . "you will come out to dinner with me, yes? Today? Tomorrow? Next week? Never mind. I ask till you come."

"He took me out." Fanchon went on. "I didn't know what he did for a living. He was in the import business with his brother, he said. I didn't know what I saw him often, although sometimes he would be gone for weeks at a time. Then through another girl at the YW I got the job of modeling dresses in a big wholesale house. Finally I went to a small hotel to live. Tony explained that the Y rules were too strict. I couldn't see him often enough. We used to dine together, go to shows, take little motor rides. I . . . I was awfully in love with him," said Fanchon and somehow a heavy load seemed lifted from her heart once she had said it.

DAILY SHORT STORY

Society Snob Is Ridiculed By Charming Girl

Molla's Michael

(All names of characters in this story are fictitious.)

"He's mine," hissed Molla Montgomery, "I saw him first!"

"Seeing him first doesn't mean anything," Inez Carter replied. "Getting a stranglehold on him is what counts."

Inez was something of a sport fan and knew much of the argot of ring and mat.

"He doesn't belong to any of us," quiet little Myrtle Parsons whispered, "until one of us leads him up the middle aisle. To the victor belong the . . . er . . ."

"Demi-god," Molla finished for her.

They were discussing Montmorency Dayton, better known in his select social circles as Monty-Day. He had only that morning arrived at The Larches. As soon as he had disappeared in the elevator cage of this most exclusive summer hostelry, the three girls had sauntered over to the desk to ask for mail, which they knew wouldn't be in for a couple of hours, and to eye the register.

They exchanged wise glances and gathered out in the formal garden by the gazing ball to discuss him.

Old Mrs. Janharden came along and they asked her, for she knew practically everything about people worth knowing anything about.

"Oh, yes, that's the real and genuine Monty-Day, my dears. He always comes to The Larches for July. Shall I introduce you?"

There was a mischievous twinkle in the dear old soul's eyes. She had introduced some scores of yearning and ambitious girls to Montmorency Dayton, and as yet none had managed to win this paragon of social virtues and modern young Croesus.

ENVIOUS OLD LADY

"Yes!" Molla cried, eagerly.

"When we chance to be near him, but don't make it look as though we had asked for an introduction," the wiser Inez cautioned.

The bathing hour at the lake was at noon.

Little old Miss Swanton, catty, envious and gossipy, saw the girls going down to the lake beach in startling new bathing suits.

"Look," she hissed, the three graces have appeared in the most daring new suits, and all on account of the coming of Mr. Dayton."

"The three graces?" Mrs. Hallop asked.

"Yes. Faith, Hope and Determination that they will all land wealthy husbands," Miss Swanton, the envious, answered.

The girls went on down and sat around, pretending to be deeply interested in three-handed bridge with those big metal beach cards.

"I bid pass, he's coming," hissed Molla.

They pretended to play, but eyed young Mr. Montmorency Dayton as he came briskly down toward the bathing spot. He was indeed a well set-up young man. It was then that Molla declared that he was hers because she had seen him first.

IGNORES GIRLS

As they whispered about him he turned and went down on the long landing where the private launches and the hotel launch were moored.

"Time for our dip, girls," Molla said and she ran out into the shallow water, ducked under and started for the float.

Without noticing the girls, Monty-Day made a neat dive from the landing and started for the float. Inez and Myrtle looked at each other.

"Molly's no fool," Inez said.

Monty was quite near the float when Molla reached it, drew herself up and struck what seemed to her to be an alluring pose. She pretended not to see Monty and called to Inez and Myrtle that the water was fine. Monty glanced up, veered a trifle, and kept on swimming, making a circle about the float and going back to the landing.

Molla and the others, sitting on the edge of the float, and laughing gaily to disguise their chagrin, agreed that this young man seemed to be not only aloof and timid but apparently snobbish and even snooty.

"We'll give him another chance tonight," Molla said.

Molla Monigomery used her head for something else besides a resting place for her curly blonde hair. She decided that the way to interest Monty was to appear very much disinterested in him. More than that, she decided to rave about someone else. She gave this much thought. Who should it be?

It would be "Michael." She would rave about Michael to him. There was the solitaire that old Munson had given her aunt and then died before the marriage date arrived. Aunty had left it to Molla. Molla got it out and proceeded to wear it.

"Don't try to fool us," Inez said, when she saw it. "He didn't give it to you, you haven't spoken 20 words with him or been alone with him."

"It is a secret," Molla declared, soberly.

She remained aloof from Monty Dayton, she was not sufficiently interested in his new helicopter to go down in the private landing field and watch him fly it.

But when they were all together, swimming the next day, Molla said, when Monty came ashore and sat on the warm edge, "Oh, Inez, Mr. Dayton reminds me so much of Michael when he swims. Michael is just a natural swimmer."

"Michael?" Inez said, questioningly. Molla nudged her.

Monty seemed to be on the verge of speaking to Molla about this Michael's swimming. Mr. Dayton held an amateur championship in swimming.

On the dance floor that evening Molla saw what she had suspected at the first when he had given her one dance, that while he was at home in the water he was somewhat lost on the ballroom floor. In other words, he was not a natural dancer.

He finished a dance with Myrtle and came and sat down with them.

"Honestly, every move that Mr. Dayton makes reminds me of my Michael," she said, and while she said it to Myrtle it was intended to reach Monty's ears—which it did.

"Your Michael must be a rather remarkable chap, Miss Montgomery," he said.

"Oh, no, not at all." Mr. Dayton—he's just himself, quite natural. He never poses or pretends, and he's rather wonderful."

"We cannot all be wonderful," Monty said, rather curtly.

PRAISES MICHAEL

"Oh, but you so remind me of Michael in every way, Mr. Dayton."

"I wonder if that is a compliment?"

"As if," Molla said, making wide and innocent eyes at him, "one could be truthful and not say nice things about you—you are so very like Michael."

Monty frowned a little. He was becoming irked of hearing so much about Molla's Michael.

"Michael," he said, drily, "must be just about perfection, at least in your eyes."

"I wouldn't have Michael different for worlds."

Monty strolled away, trying to appear bored but else Molla knew that she had, as she told Inez, "got him guessing."

"But whatever do you mean by talking so much about your Michael? Who is he? Or is he some figment of your imagination?"

"Michael is quite real," Molla declared.

"You devil . . . you're up to something," Myrtle said, noting the gleam in Molla's pretty eyes.

"It won't do any good—none of us have the least chance to annex Monty, either he isn't the marrying sort or else he is looking for some princess of royal blood," Inez remarked.

"Pooh, who wants him?"

"We all of us would be tickled pink to catch him," the outspoken Myrtle said.

"But we haven't a chance and I'm beginning to think he would be awfully nerve-racking to live with, so dignified and full of ego and so—so—"

"Darn snooty off stage as well as on," Molla finished for Inez.

When the Jardine girl arrived at The Larches, Monty seemed to fall for her. He would. Most men would. She was that sort—dashing, vivacious and with an air about her that seemed to lure young men as a magnet draws metal.

To make matters worse, the Jardine girl was outrageously upstage. She didn't snub the girls, she patronized them, and anyone knows how terrible it is to be patronized.

When they were all gathered on the terrace chatting, after the successful annual charity concert that The Larches gave for the town on the lake, servants put down the great green canvas for dancing.

While they were doing this there was some fancy diving in the hotel pool which was used by the timid and the snobbish souls, who did not want to mingle with the public on the lake bathing beach.

Monty went in for some of the diving. He won a prize. They were congratulating him when the Jardine girl somewhat overdid it. She declared that no professional could equal "Dear Monty's" diving.

"He's wonderful," Molla cried, "just wonderful—he reminds me of my dear Michael—he dives and swims and dances and walks exactly like my Michael."

"Indeed?" said the Jardine girl, but the accent she used implied that she believed Molla was telling a plain, unvarnished lie.

Monty seemed nettled.

"My dear Miss Montgomery," he said, with emphasis and the hint of a nasty slur in his voice, "will you tell us who the devil this most wonderful Michael of yours really is?"

"Why, yes," Molla said, innocently, "didn't you know?"

"I'm asking. I am interested in the Michael you seem to think I so greatly resemble."

INQUIRES ABOUT MICHAEL

"Oh, you do resemble him, Monty," Molla said, using that name for the first time, and most familiarly, "you are just like my Michael—you see Michael lives in my aquarium at home—he is a pet turtle!"

Such a chorus of yells and gale of ribald laughter arose at this that Montmorency Dayton packed up and departed that night.

Inez said to Molla the next morning, "I didn't know you had an aquarium."

"I haven't," Molla admitted, "but if I had one I'd get a turtle and name him Michael and he would look and act just like Monty, and if I had Monty I'd put him in an aquarium—the poor fish!"

Ladies! Please remember that you must let us have your requirements for Saturday evening at least four days in advance. Last Saturday night we were overwhelmed with demands for our Super-Extra-Special What-a-Men at the last moment. This forced us to send out four or five What-a-Men from the warehouse, before they could be dusted off and properly oiled. Though weary and dazed, these What-a-Men did their best to appear merry and bright. Some of our customers were not as satisfied as they would have been had they called before Wednesday. BE A PITTSBURGH BOOSTER
To Your Friends in Other Cities

A Political Threat

Coyne's Candidacy May Bring Interesting Event. Comment on Local News.

Political gossip has it that Joseph G. Armstrong has sent word to Mayor Charles H. Kline that unless he takes Senator James J. Coyne off the Public Works Commissioners race Armstrong will throw the whole weight of his organization in the city to the support of the four independent candidates for City Council. That would be bad news for the people of Pittsburgh, for it would propel into the election of the independents without a single worthy [illegible]

When gang politicians lay out their slates for independent candidates to run [illegible] support of the Armstrong machine it never is [illegible] and not as the result of a deal, but solely to punish the Kline machine would be welcome. The independents in such circumstances would incur no obligations whatever to the Armstrong faction. A mighty machine in return for its help.

John D. Houston, the wholesale grocer, has not only won a personal victory in his [illegible] for the people of Pittsburgh by exposing the Department of Supplies, through the threat of court action, to the [illegible] specifications under which [illegible] asked to bid for the contract of [illegible] Homes at M[illegible]

The specifications against which Houston protested did not conform to [illegible] and while it is conceivable that the [illegible] to the benefit of the taxpayers and the disadvantage of the [illegible] bidder, it might also have worked [illegible] At any rate neither party [illegible] the risk of loss.

John Houston deserves a large amount of credit for his outspoken criticism of what he has deemed [illegible] of corruption in the Kline administration. Many others have been as aware of, and as disgusted with conditions as Houston, but they did not have the courage to speak out. And it takes more than passive disapproval to make the administration change its ways.

The most effective plan for making the administration behave lies, of course, in electing honest, intelligent and independent men to Council. The people of Pittsburgh now have an opportunity to do that very thing, and if they fail to do so, in view of the revelations of the last year, the conclusion will be inevitable that they do not take extravagance and crookedness in the city government very seriously.

Apropos of the political campaign, the contest for judges of the Common Pleas Court should not be overlooked. There is a bewildering multitude of candidates for the seven places; but some of them tower head and shoulders above the others in their fitness for the bench. Among them is Judge Joseph Stadtfield.

One of the many things that should commend Judge Stadtfield to the voters is his recognition of the injustice and inconvenience that are caused by the long summer suspension of jury trials. A step forward has been taken this year in the midsummer session of the grand jury, but there is still more to be done before the courts will be entirely free from criticism on this score.

Summer sessions at the University of Pittsburgh will end next week. For ten weeks ambitious teachers taking special work, and undergraduates aiming to finish the four-year course in three years, have been attending classes. They did not let the heat keep them from work, and there is no good reason why the courts should suspend in summer.

Educational systems, by the way, are in a state of flux, and several of the colleges have undertaken interesting experiments. President Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, discouraged with methods that have changed little in 200 years, has reorganized the system and hopes to graduate some intellectual giants. There is an article about his plan in the American Weekly section of the Sunday Sun-Telegraph to be issued tomorrow.

The Gravure Section of tomorrow's Sun-Telegraph will also merit your attention, for it will contain reproductions in colors of two remarkable paintings—"The Fencing Master" by Gari Melchers and "The Old Fashioned Gown" by Ivan Olinsky. Both painters have exhibited in the Carnegie International. Some charming pictures of Pittsburgh children will also be found in the Gravure Section.

Pittsburghers distinguished themselves in the National Glider Competitions at Elmira, N. Y., this week. Last year a young Pittsburgher, Augustus Haller, won one of the important glider contests. It was proposed, subsequently, to ask the glider association to hold its competitions at Pittsburgh, which is said to have just the right sort of topography for gliding. It is to be hoped that movement has not been abandoned.

There is now probably no chance of getting any big glider contest for the city before next year, but opportunity offers to secure an interesting aeronautical exhibition of another kind. Why not make an effort to have the new dirigible "Akron" visit Pittsburgh? It must cruise for a specified number of hours before the government will accept it, and Pittsburgh would be a convenient place to visit. We suggest that the Chamber of Commerce submit to the proper authorities a request for a visit of the "Akron."

A report from the State Department of Mines in regard to mining fatalities in July brings to mind an aspect of the miner's work that emphasizes the need of a square deal for him. His employment is irregular and his wages at present are far from satisfactory. In addition to these disadvantages he has to run serious risk of losing his life. Three hundred and thirty-nine miners lost their lives in Pennsylvania coal mines during the first seven months of 1931.

Conferences are to be held next week with a view to finding some solution for the problems of the coal industry. Grant that they may accomplish something that will help the miners as well as the operators.

Prohibition's Garden

There are no flowers in the garden of Volstead: nothing but weeds of the rankest, vilest sort.

Take special note of the Prohibition crop as depicted by Cartoonist Enright above.

But what could you expect except VICE, CRIME, GANGSTERS, RACKETEERS, ALL THE SPAWN OF THE UNDERWORLD, INTEMPERANCE, CONTEMPT FOR LAW, CORRUPT POLITICS, DEBAUCHED COURTS to thrive when watered by a flood of bootleg poison.

It is not a pleasant picture. But it is a TRUE picture.

How long will the sane, sober, temperance loving majority of the American people permit it to remain a true picture?

The answer is just so long as this majority permits the PROHIBITION FOLLY to continue.

'There Is No Money in Public Retainers'

By BAINBRIDGE COLBY

ONE of the younger members of the bar called on me the other day. Several years have passed since he came to me, as he was finishing his course at the law school, for advice as to where he should seek an opening for the practice of law.

He had the good fortune to obtain a place in one of the larger law offices and has made good.

Mr. Colby

I asked him what he contemplated doing, in the way of public service, for he is a man of unusual capabilities—well read, a persuasive talker and with a personality that inspires liking as well as respect.

"Oh, nothing," said he, "I am confining myself to private practice. THERE IS NO MONEY IN A PUBLIC RETAINER."

THERE goes one more, I thought, and could not but reflect how few of the thousands who graduate from our colleges, and, at the threshold of their lives, have the benefit of systematic instruction in the history of our institutions; who are taught the duty of the citizen and understand so much better than the generality of men, the dangers that encircle the state, the city and the nation; how few are able to stand up under the downward pull of easy promotion, monetary success and the patronage and countenance of those who can dispense or withhold the so-called good things of life.

"It is better to lie a little, than to be unhappy much," said one of the characters in the play, "The Darling of the Gods."

Perhaps it is this thought which wars against the promptings of our better selves and makes us forget America—the dream country of our forefathers—in the compromises with truth and surrenders of principle that line "the easiest way."

In truth, "there is no money in a public retainer," at least relatively to the gains from other service. But this does not justify us in allowing life in the finer view, with its opportunities for disinterested striving and high adventure, to slip through our grasp. Only an inferior man is content to be regarded as safe and sane by dullards who find him soothing and crooks who find him useful.

NOT SUCH A MAN WAS THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Writing in his "autobiography," of his first term in the New York Legislature, when his independence had not only alarmed his party but startled the conservative element in the state, he says:

"Various men whom I have known socially, and had been taught to look up to, prominent business men and lawyers, acted in a way which not only astounded me, but which I was quite unable to reconcile with the theories I had formed as to their high standing."

He relates a conversation with a member of a prominent law firm, an old family friend, who "explained that I had done well in the Legislature, that it was a good thing to have made the 'reform play,' that I had shown that I possessed ability such as would make me useful in THE RIGHT KIND OF LAW OFFICE or business concern; but that I must not overplay my hand; that I had gone far enough, and that now was the TIME TO LEAVE POLITICS and to IDENTIFY MYSELF WITH THE RIGHT KIND OF PEOPLE, THE PEOPLE WHO WOULD ALWAYS in the long run CONTROL OTHERS AND OBTAIN THE REAL REWARDS WHICH WERE WORTH HAVING.

"I asked him if that meant that I was to yield to the 'ring' in politics. He answered somewhat impatiently that I was entirely mistaken about there being a 'political ring,' of the kind of which the papers were fond of talking; that the 'ring,' if it could be called such—that is, THE 'INNER CIRCLE'—INCLUDED CERTAIN BIG BUSINESS MEN AND THE POLITICIANS, LAWYERS AND JUDGES WHO WERE IN ALLIANCE WITH AND TO A CERTAIN EXTENT DEPENDENT UPON THEM, and that THE SUCCESSFUL MAN HAD TO WIN HIS SUCCESS BY THE BACKING OF THE SAME FORCES, WHETHER IN LAW, BUSINESS OR POLITICS.

"This," Roosevelt added, "was the first glimpse I had of that combination between business and politics upon which I was in after years so often to oppose."

WHAT a legacy of high-mindedness and courage the Colonel left to his countrymen. Let not the lessons of his life grow dim. Let us keep them burnished bright.

Never have we stood in greater need of them.

With crime stalking through the land, and corruption looked upon as innocent, and practiced without apology or concealment, we may well pause and consider the extent to which the appalling conditions of today are due to bad citizenship and an almost swinish insensibility to our public duties.

YOUR GARDEN
By BETTINE VIRGINIA

Come down into your garden, fair
Helene
And we will [illegible] like the larkspur is your pale blue gown
To find a rosebud faintly-tipped
To match your satin cheek
Come down into your garden
Of you it seems to speak

I'm waiting in your garden, dear

mystery of your eyes
And your proud head to reach the fragrant lilacs grew
Come down into your garden
For your garden lives in you!

Do come into your garden, my
Helene
Verbenas scent the twilight, as the perfume of your hair—

I found tonight, a strange new flower in the dew
Come down into your garden—
That passion-flower is YOU!

And now, if that flower doesn't grow, it has simply NO appreciation.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS

Love That Lasts

Romance paints a love supreme,
Wrought of star-dust, glamour,
dream;
Something fairer than Earth
knows
Something kin to Dawn and rose.

But the love men hold most dear
Must be faithful, must be near.
In the hours of need and stress,
Must know ways of tenderness.

Romance fills a twilight hour
With the fragrance of a flower;
But the love that lasts must be
Deeply rooted like a tree.

ENGLAND DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The Thames seems such a dinky river for so much romancing. It is no wider than the little creek back home after a spring rain. Yet to the Londoner it is a murky strip of magic. Along its bridges are always spellbound gazers looking down like gargoyles from a parapet.

Every hour of the day and most of the night it flings its challenge to the huddled streets and market places and brings loiterers to the embankment for a stolen moment or so. There is no swift current to the Thames. Instead it swirls sluggishly and depressingly about its weathered stones.

Strings of linked barges float lazily by and now and then a thin mast. And that is all. Along the Thames is a Cleopatra Needle, just like the one in our Central Park. But the fiercely biting London weather has exacted its toll. Whereas ours is well preserved this one is chipped, charred and black.

Fifty years of London have done it far greater harm than all of its three thousand years in Egypt. Soon it must come down and its remnants carted to a museum. To me these Cleopatra Needles flick the imagination. On this one Rameses the Great carved his name.

Moses, a priest in Heliopolis, beheld it every day. Once Egyptian slaves floated it along the Nile for the pleasure of Pharaoh. It was moved from Alexandria to England encased in an enormous cylinder of steel. Many lives were lost bringing it through the tortuous Bay of Biscay.

Along benches of the embankment this morning were clutters of victims of the "dole" which every intelligent Englishman believes must be stopped if Britain is to survive. They have learned to live without work by this government support and ambition is cloyed.

There are many young men in the empire today who, like columnists, never worked a single day in their lives. They arise at noon, drift to public parks and sit like so many statues until time to go for something to eat or return to lodgings for sleep.

London as this is being pecked out has not a "smash hit" in its theaters. And the forthcoming season looms unusually bleak. It is far worse here than on Broadway's Rialto. Actor hang-outs along Leicester Square and Charing Cross Road are packed with jobless. There is no Hollywood to relieve distress. The biggest figures in theatricals here are the American born Charles Cochran and Gilbert Miller and they are blue over the outlook.

This afternoon we jolted over the cobble-stone market in north London where every week end is a sale comparable to the Flea Circus in Paris. Spread out in the streets are piles of what-nots like so much junk. In poking about with a cane I uncovered a brass rooming house sign: "Tyke it for a sixpence," shouted the merchant. I walked on. He called again: "A tuppence!" A little disgusted he called: "Hi, say Guvner, it's a bloomin' antique!"

On way back to our waiting taxi we passed one of those traveling fairs with a hand turned carrousel, a few candy booths, ring-the-cane games and a moth eaten camel that rode the children for a few pennies around the block. Nothing to me offers the supercilious expression of a camel. This one made me think of a chorus girl I saw once meeting her husband's Park avenue family for the first time.

The King and Queen of Spain have settled down to their London exile. Reporters no longer find them "copy." In the excitement of his hurried exit from his native land Alfonso bore up well and exhibited commendable optimism. But along Fleet street they now say he is utterly crushed—sitting most of the time in a chair, gazing in a dazed fashion out a window and opening and closing a jeweled cigaret case.

Saville Row, England's style capital for men, is in the doldrums. Its shops seemed utterly deserted today. I attempted to stimulate trade by negotiating for a backless white vest in one establishment. After measuring me meticulously, he inquired: "Shall I make up a half or full dozen?" I sort of backed away and twittered that I wanted only one. Adding: "You know, just for parties." The bored look and inarticulate disgust made me feel about the tiniest since I sat in a modernistic music rack all evening at Gene Crawley's, thinking it was a chair.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

How much of her pay check should a working girl . . . or a working boy . . . give to the family?

That may not be Front Page News to you, but it is to thousands of youngsters who read this column and their more or less irate Moms and Dads.

Who's entitled to that pay check——

The parents, who raised Rosie and Rob to working age——

Or the youngsters who are holding down the jobs?

Mrs. Evans, for instance, would much like to know. Here's her letter—a score like it in every mail——

Dear Miss Robinson——

I wonder if you can help me in a discussion that is causing a lot of trouble in our family.

I am a widow and dependent on my daughter, Alice, for support. She makes $25 a week, working downtown, and brings it all home to me. Every other week I give her $10. I also give her carfare and money for lunches, which usually comes to around $2.10 per week. She has $2.00 taken out of her monthly wages for insurance, and pays $2.25 for stock every week. I keep the rest.

That makes about $113, which she earns per month—out of which she gives about $12 for stock and insurance, spends about $9 for lunches and carfare, $20 for clothes, dentist and doctor bills and amusements while I keep the remaining $72.

Now she is getting so she isn't satisfied. She claims she is giving me too much money. She says I ought to give her back more than $20 a month and that she doesn't have enough to buy decent clothes for herself.

I have two younger girls, besides her. One is going to school, one is at home. They need her money too.

Which one of us is right? Shouldn't she be able to manage on what I give her? And haven't I a right to her support?

MRS. ANNA EVANS.
Denver, Colo.

Or there's Carl—hundreds of Carls. Carl gets a little fatter split than Alice—but he also gets a fatter envelope. Like her he has nothing left after he has paid his monthly installment on the new blue suit.

"I'm 21," says Carl, "and I'd like a future like other fellows, but what can I do when my mother and father hang on to almost all I earn. They are old country people and they think I ought to help carry the family expenses. There are five younger children. My father thinks it is up to me to help him pay the bills, but I can't see it.

"IS IT MY FAULT IF MY FATHER WENT AHEAD AND HAD SIX CHILDREN WITHOUT BEING ABLE TO AFFORD THEM? AND HOW CAN I EVER SAVE ENOUGH TO HAVE A FAMILY OF MY OWN IF I HAVE TO SUPPORT HIS?

"Don't you think a fellow does enough if he pays for board and lodging at home, as he would have to anywhere else?

"CARL JOHNSON."

Well—do you or don't you?

Is Carl right in thinking that he owes his first duty to his own life?

Or is dad right in thinking that Carl owes him a debt for past favors received?

Is Alice right in stating that a modern working girl can't dress decently on $5 per week?

Or is Mom right in thinking that's ample?

If it were YOUR problem, what would your answer be?

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. Mundy

To a correspondent:

There are times when you think you would do big things if you had half a chance.

But you can't decide the line wherein lies unusual success for you.

Because you can't come to any conclusion as to what use you should put your talents, you have failed to register anything out of the ordinary.

You have a lot of ideas—chaotic—fleeting, of little practical value.

You love to tell your friends about the wonderful thoughts that float through your mind during the night when you cannot sleep because you are planning.

But nothing comes of all this so-called deep study in the dead of night.

The mere fact of one thing after another parading through your mind so rapidly shows a disorganized mental process rather than a useful one.

It is very easy for brain force to go on a rampage.

Too tired, or lack of concentration and your mind flits.

You can't keep to one subject long enough to do any good by thought.

Don't indulge in such flights, for it is harmful to mind stability.

ISN'T IT SO?

It's enough to sour anyone always to be in a pickle.

As for the rising generation, it's really the parents who are up in the air.

Getting mad about a thing doesn't prove that a man is right about it so much as it suggests that he is wrong.

Some men use a few good traits as a camouflage.

The highest science of all is the science of mankind, used in the service of the good.

If we always got what was coming to us, what a lot of punishment some of us would have to take.
